This public document was prepared at a cost of $89,989.11 or $30.00 per copy to inform legislators, state officials, state and local planners, health care providers, educators, and members of the general public about the health status of Florida's population and the supply of health manpower, facilities and services available to meet the health care needs of Florida's residents and visitors. HRS complies with the state and federal nondiscrimination policies relating to race, sex, age and handicapping condition.

Acknowledgments

The atlas staff is indebted to the many individuals in HRS program offices, other state agencies and private organizations who assisted in data collection for this edition of the Florida Health Care Atlas. Among the many contributing HRS offices were the Aging and Adult Services Program Office, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Program Office, the Children's Medical Services, Program Office, the Health Program Office, the Medicaid Program Office, the Office of Emergency Medical Services, the Office of Licensure and Certification and the Developmental Disabilities Planning Council. Other state agencies contributing to the atlas included the Department of Education, the Department of General Services, the Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles, the Department of Insurance, the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation of the Department of Labor and Employment Security, Florida Department of Law Enforcement, the Department of Professional Regulation, and the Hospital Cost Containment Board. Additional data were obtained from the American Hospital Association, ESRD Network 19, the Florida Association of Home Health Agencies, the Florida Hospital Association, the Florida Voluntary Health Association, and many individual health care providers.

Dedication

The 1987 Florida Health Care Atlas is dedicated to the memory of Delmar R. Miller, D.D.S., M.P.H., a compassionate professional colleague who worked tirelessly for many years to further the advancement of public health dentistry in Florida.

Preface

The Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS) has designed the Florida Health Care Atlas to graphically depict the characteristics of Florida's population and the status of Florida's health care system. This concept was first developed by HRS editor J. Barry Mittan in 1972 during production of the Florida State Health Plan. Between 1973 and 1976, the Office of Comprehensive Health Planning produced a preliminary series of maps showing the differences among counties based on the 1970 census, vital statistics, health manpower and hospital facilities data. Many maps were used in other reports but due to limitations in the data and lack of cartographic production facilities, none were published in a compiled version.

Receipt of data from the 1980 federal census provided a new impetus for the HRS Office of Comprehensive Health Planning to establish specific automated data systems to collect and analyze data on health facilities and manpower, certificate of need, population and demographics. By 1986, sufficient data were available to begin computer mapping. At this point, the Institute of Science and Public Affairs at Florida State University contacted former HRS Secretary William Page with a proposal to prepare a health manpower atlas for Florida similar to ones produced in other states. Using funds budgeted for this project to cover FSU's production and editing costs, the Office of Comprehensive Health Planning provided the additional data and analysis needed to expand the publication to cover population, vital statistics and health facilities data. Using highly sophisticated cartographic and graphics production facilities at FSU's Florida Resources and Environmental Analysis Center, HRS and FSU staff produced the first comprehensive and concise overview of Florida's health care system—the 1986 Florida Health Care Atlas.

The 1987 Florida Health Care Atlas is the second atlas to be produced by the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services in conjunction with Florida State University. Data collection and analysis for the atlas series is provided by the HRS Office of Regulation and Health Facilities under its legislative mandate to establish and maintain a comprehensive statewide health care data base. The office collects much of the data directly and assembles the remainder from primary sources such as the Department of Professional Regulation, the Office of Vital Statistics and the U. S. Bureau of the Census. FSU provides cartographic production, layout and related services through its Florida Resources and Environmental Analysis Center. Cartographic production and printing costs are covered through sales of the atlas to the public by HRS.

Each Florida Health Care Atlas serves as a basic health care reference guide for legislators, public officials, health care providers and the public. The 1986 edition provides a statewide summary of significant health data, while the 1987 version emphasizes district and county data. This version includes county-specific health manpower and facilities data plus demographic and health status profiles of each of the eleven HRS service districts. While the 1986 version portrayed the general distribution of specific types of health facilities on statewide or district maps, the 1987 edition plots facility locations on detailed small scale county, sub-county, and city maps. County maps using a 1:500,000 scale are generally employed with enlargements of urbanized areas provided to assist the reader in more accurately locating facilities in high density areas. The symbols on each map indicate both the type of facility and its approximate location. To determine the statewide distribution of a specific type of facility, the user should refer to the 1986 Florida Health Care Atlas. To find a specific facility location or determine the distribution of all health facilities within an area, the reader should use the 1987 edition.

The 1987 Florida Health Care Atlas is divided into three major sections: health status issues, health manpower and health care facilities. The health status section is arranged to show the major health risks to Floridians at all ages. Several major periods of life are emphasized: gestation through birth to one year of age, childhood, the adolescent years, adulthood and old age. Analysis of vital statistics data has shown a distinct pattern of risks in each of these age groups. The health manpower section provides an overall picture of the distribution of health professionals and medical specialists throughout the state through a series of health manpower tables.

The largest section of the 1987 Florida Health Care Atlas is the health care facilities and services section. The section begins with an overview of Florida's health care system, listing the total number of facilities, bed supply and related data for each county. The majority of the section is devoted to the detailed county and city maps of health care facilities grouped by HRS service district. The maps are accompanied by district profiles. Each map includes identifiable health and health-related facilities located in each county including medical treatment facilities, residential and long term care facilities, and mental health treatment facilities. An appendix and gazetteer lists addresses for Florida health care providers and provides map references for reader use in determining facility locations.

When reviewing facility maps, readers should be aware of the constant change within Florida's health care system. Facilities are opened, replaced, moved or closed continually throughout the year. Although HRS staff have made every effort to ensure that currently operating facilities are listed, there will be instances where closed facilities remain listed or new facilities have not been added. Any corrections to the 1987 Florida Health Care Atlas should be reported to the Data Analysis Unit, Office of Regulation and Health Facilities, 2727 Mahan Drive, Tallahassee, Florida 32308.

Health Status

A mortality rate graph is extremely useful in illustrating differences in the risks faced by individuals throughout life. At various ages, the effects of heredity, lifestyle, interaction with the environment or biology may be the most crucial determinants of longevity.

During the prenatal period the fetus is at risk of disease and death as a result of genetic defects or from the detrimental effects of the mother's lifestyle such as alcohol or drug abuse, improper medications, smoking, poor nutrition, or contraction of sexually transmissible diseases.

In the first year of life, infants are subject not only to the latent effects of prenatal problems, but also to difficulties associated with initial adaptation to the environment, e.g. susceptibility to communicable diseases. Since infants are totally dependent upon others for care, risks during the first year of life are also created by the actions of others. Homicides of children are often the result of child abuse, while accidental deaths are usually the result of parental error or lack of supervision. Some accidental deaths are the result of the infant's early interaction with new experiences, but most accidents could be prevented by adequate parental care.

During the preschool and school age periods, environmental factors have an even greater impact. As children mature, their greater range of motion and mobility puts them in contact with more individuals and potentially dangerous situations. The risks of contracting communicable diseases increase as children in schools and day care centers work and play in close proximity to each other. The risk of death by homicide increases as children are exposed to individuals outside the family group. Accidental deaths increase as the children's natural curiosity compels them to explore their environment and experiment with new situations. Inexperience with the dangers of the environment may result in deaths by drowning, falls, fire, suffocation or as the result of being hit by a motor vehicle. Since parents and educators protect most children most of the time, deaths rates in these age groups are low.

As children become adults, risks increase dramatically as a result of the interaction of two major factors: (1) the desire of the individual to experience all of life's opportunities and (2) the increase in responsibility for one's own actions. Societal pressures are placed upon individuals early to undertake activities which may be detrimental to their health without parental protection or guidance. For adolescents and young adults, the individual's lifestyle is the most important factor in life expectancy. Most deaths can be attributed to accidents, homicides, and suicides while many health problems result from experimentation with drugs, alcohol and sex.

For older adults, the long-term effects of lifestyle on the body become more important. Smoking, alcoholism, drug abuse, stress, improper nutrition, lack of exercise and other factors combine to increase mortality from cardiovascular disease, cancer and stroke. For the elderly, the biological process of aging becomes the primary factor in life expectancy as portions of the body simply cease to function. The very elderly are susceptible to dangers in their environment. Falls and fires also claim many lives, while extremes of temperature can cause death from heat stroke, hypothermia, or from pneumonia and influenza as the body loses its ability to fight off trauma or disease.

The upper curve of the graph on page 1 gives the annual probability of death for all ages from birth to 102 years. This graph is based upon Florida resident deaths for the year 1985, representing a total of 120,495 deaths below 103 years of age. In order to construct this curve, mid-year 1985 populations for each age category were estimated from data supplied by the Bureau of Economic and Business Research at the University of Florida. The data were plotted on a logarithmic scale (Y axis) in order to keep the chart to a manageable size, and a curve-fitting procedure was used to improve readability. The graph shows that the probability of dying increases smoothly with age from about age 35 to 95 when plotted on a log scale. This is an often observed fact in populations where primarily the effects of aging and disease act upon the death rate.

During the first year of life, the probability of death is high, about one chance out of a hundred. This probability falls rapidly for the next few years reaching a lifetime low of about 28 per 100,000 at age eight. From about age 12 to 32, a departure from a smoothly rising curve occurs. This deviation is mainly a result of the increase in accidental deaths in these ages and, to a lesser extent, homicide and suicide.

The proportion of deaths due to the major causes at every age is shown by the shaded bands or zones in the main body of the graph. One may simultaneously view the probability of death at a particular age and the relative contributions at that age from various causes. Readers should not, however, try to read the probability of death for an individual cause from the scale on the Y axis. Although causes of death "appear" and "disappear" from this graph, this does not imply that the causes shown do not, or cannot, occur at other ages, only that they are relatively rare outside of the ages covered.

From birth to one year of age, perinatal conditions and congenital anomalies are the major causes of death. Perinatal conditions are restricted to the first year of life (as is shown on this graph). Deaths from congenital anomalies can continue throughout life; however, for all practical purposes they are insignificant past the age of four. At about age ten, a number of other causes, including heart disease, cancer, suicide, and homicide become significant. It is also at this age that the marked deviation from the expected curve begins to appear. By age 15, cancer, suicide, and homicide are about equally important, and heart disease somewhat less so. At this age accidents are the leading cause of death, accounting for about one-half of all deaths. Accidents continue as the leading cause until about age 38. Proceeding through the teen and young adult years, there is an increasing proportion of suicide and homicide deaths until about age 33 or 34. Close examination of the graph clearly shows a plateau in the probability of death between ages 24 and 30 primarily due to a drop in accidental deaths.

Cancer begins to emerge as a significant risk at about age 34 and exceeds every other cause of death from age 39 to about age 68. From age 68 until the end of life, heart disease is the predominate cause of death. Using the 1985 Florida resident data, the probability of dying of cancer between ages 20 and 80 is about 29 percent. After age 80 the probability of ever dying of cancer falls to only 13 percent. This reversal is probably due more to the increased incidence of heart disease than to an abatement of cancer.

Three other causes of death, all more or less consequences of the aging process, become established after the age of 40. Stroke, also known as cerebrovascular disease, emerges in the forties and accounts for about five percent of deaths up to age 68, after which it shows some increase, causing about ten percent of fatalities up to age 95. Chronic obstructive lung disease (C.O.L.D.), which includes bronchitis, emphysema, and asthma, makes its appearance in the 55-64 year age group and is the fourth leading cause of death until it is surpassed by influenza/pneumonia at about age 85. Flu and pneumonia are particularly hazardous to the very elderly. At age 100 influenza/pneumonia is the third most prevalent cause of death. At extreme old age the rate of increase in the probability of death slows. The exact reason for this is unclear, but it may be genetic or due to an accumulation of acquired immunities. Also, according to Medicare program mortality experience, blacks enjoy lower death rates than whites after age 87, the only time in the life span that this is true.

Life expectancy for a given year is the number of years that a baby born in that year will live if it experiences the same death rates at every age that the population has experienced in that year. This statistic is usually calculated for specific race and sex groups using data from a three-year period. Between 1919 and 1979, white female life expectancy at birth in Florida has risen 18.3 years, a 30.2 percent increase. The white male improvement in the same period has been 13.8 years, a 24.1 percent increase. For the period between 1929 and 1979, comparable figures for nonwhite females are 23.5 years and 48.1 percent and for nonwhite males 18.4 years and 40.5 percent. Life expectancy for blacks in Florida still lags behind that of whites for both sexes, but the difference has narrowed over the last 50 years. In 1919, nonwhite life expectancy was only 76.4 percent of that for whites. By 1979, it had increased to 90.8 percent of the figure for whites. Public programs which provide better education, greater access to medical care, better housing, and improved nutrition have been responsible for much of this improvement. Health risks which affect life expectancy in each age group are discussed in the remainder of this section.

Infants and Children

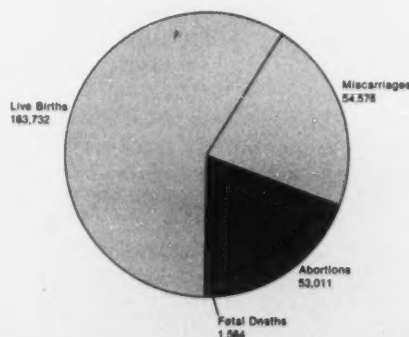

In examining the health status of Florida's children, morbidity and mortality data are presented in distinct groups: prenatal (before birth); neonatal (the first twenty eight days of life); infant (first year of life); pre-school (ages one through four) and school age (ages five through fourteen). These groups were selected for two reasons: (1) they present a clear representation of the developmental stages in childhood; and (2) they correspond to the age groupings in the aggregated data distributed by most state and federal agencies. In order to permit comparisons among data from various sources, 1985 data are used for most analyses except when more recent data are available. The classifications for race are white and nonwhite. The nonwhite classification includes black Americans (about 98%), Orientals, American Indians and Pacific Islanders.

Prenatal

In 1985, there were an estimated 272,883 pregnancies in Florida, approximately 60 percent of which resulted in a live birth. The estimated number of pregnancies was derived by combining the 163,732 live births with recorded abortions, fetal deaths (deaths after 20 weeks of gestation) and an estimate of the number of miscarriages. Accurate data on the number of miscarriages are not available because women often do not go to the hospital when a miscarriage occurs and there is no mandatory recording of miscarriages. Professional estimates on the actual number range from 10 to 33 percent; however, the Department of Health and Human Services in its publication "Prevention of Embryonic, Fetal and Perinatal Disease" provides an estimate of between 15 and 25 percent. Using a mid-range figure of 20 percent, it is estimated that 54,576 miscarriages occurred based on the number of live births. Miscarriages occur naturally and spontaneously, usually during the second or third month of pregnancy. More than 80 percent of miscarried embryos and fetuses examined by microscope reveal a deformity or biological malfunction.

There were 53,011 abortions performed in Florida in 1985. Women elect to have therapeutic abortions for many reasons. A diagnostic test may have revealed a medical or physical abnormality of the fetus, the parents may have a family history of hereditary diseases, or there may be a social or humanitarian reason for the abortion. In some cases, a pregnancy may result in serious medical problems for the expectant mother. Florida permits abortions through the twenty fourth week of pregnancy without statutory limitations. Terminations within the last 16 weeks of pregnancy are authorized only to preserve the life of the mother due to a medical emergency. Although health facilities are required to file a report on each abortion with the Office of Vital Statistics, they do not provide demographic data on the mother. Statistics are available only by county of occurrence; therefore, resident data compiled by county, age, race and other factors cannot be calculated. National incidence data compiled by the National Center for Health Statistics indicate that whites have an abortion rate of 22.26 percent compared to the nonwhite rate of 29.6 percent. Since there are a greater number of white births, whites have almost twice the total number of abortions as nonwhites. Teenagers aged 19 and under have 26.13 percent of all abortions, and women under the age of 24 account for the majority (60.25%) of all abortions.

Fetal deaths, often called stillbirths, occur during the last half of pregnancy. Fetal deaths can be caused by any number of medical factors such as infections, blood incompatibilities or maternal deficiencies. The fetal death rate in Florida has shown a constant decline over the last 25 years from 16.0 per 1000 live births in 1960 to 9.6 in 1985. Data for 1986 show a rate of 9.6 per 1000. The 1,564 fetal deaths in Florida in 1985 represented 0.6 percent of all pregnancies.

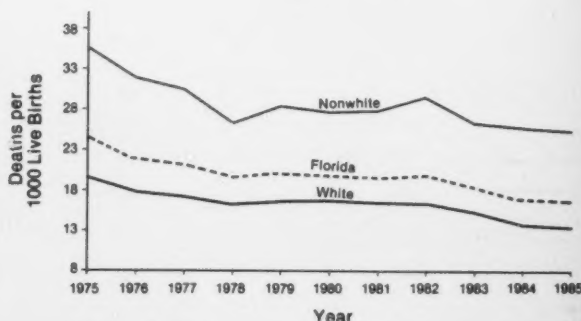

Adequate prenatal care is a major factor contributing to the birth of a healthy infant. The risk of having a child born with a handicapping condition, in need of specialized intensive care for an acute problem, or who dies during the perinatal period can be greatly minimized by adequate prenatal care. A primary indicator of prenatal care is the number of prenatal visits a woman has prior to delivery. For the best pregnancy outcome prenatal care should begin in the first three months of pregnancy. In 1984, Florida ranked 48th among the 50 states in the overall percentage of pregnant women who received early (starting in the first trimester) prenatal care. Only 67.7 percent of pregnant women in Florida received prenatal care beginning in the first trimester. In 1985, the median number of prenatal visits was 11.1. Included in this figure, however, are 8,473 babies (5.17 percent of all births) whose mothers had received no prenatal care.

The Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS) is concentrating on the development of programs which assure maternity care to pregnant women. Major improvements are anticipated by educating mothers as to the need for adequate prenatal care and by providing prenatal services to women previously unable to afford or access it. The Improved Pregnancy Outcome (IPO) Program is the most extensive statewide effort to improve the availability and utilization of prenatal care services.

It provides comprehensive prenatal care to women unable to obtain care through the private sector. The IPO program provided 35,095 women with maternity care during 1985, principally through county public health units. These women gave birth to 28,801 infants, 17.59 percent of all 1985 Florida births. In addition, Florida is the first state to implement a statewide preterm prevention program. The Preterm Birth Prevention Protocol provides specialized counseling and increased prenatal care to women in the IPO program who are identified as at risk for preterm birth (18,412 women in 1985).

Another statewide program, the Regional Perinatal Intensive Care Centers Program (RPICC) has an obstetrical component which provides specialized care to high risk indigent pregnant women. A pregnancy may be considered high risk for many reasons. The mother's medical history may show diabetes, high blood pressure, or sickle cell anemia. She may have had fertility problems or previous obstetrical complications. The fetus may show signs of too little growth or multiple births may be expected. During the 1985-1986 fiscal year 3,739 RPICC program patients received these specialized obstetrical services, and an additional 999 women received medical evaluations but were not medically eligible for the program. Of the program's obstetrical patients, 2,729 mothers delivered 2,894 babies. Seventy percent of the women entered the program during the prenatal period and 30% entered the program at the time of delivery. Since the RPICC obstetrical component began in 1977, over 20,000 women with high risk pregnancies have received prenatal and obstetrical care. The impact of the RPICC obstetrical component can be noted in the perinatal death rate (fetal plus neonatal death rates) which declined from 21.1 per 1000 births in 1977 to 16.8 per 1000 in 1985.

Neonatal

There were 163,732 infants born to Florida residents in 1985. Although Florida's 1985 birth rate, 14.4 births per 1000 population, was below the national birth rate of 15.5, it has been steadily increasing since 1976 when the rate was 12.2 births per 1000. Final data for 1986, however, show a slight decrease in the rate to 14.3 per 1000. Although the birth rate for nonwhites (24.6) was almost twice the rate for whites (12.5), 74.6 percent of the total resident births in 1986 were white and 25.4 percent were nonwhite. Almost all (98%) of the infants were born in a hospital and 93.1 percent of hospital births were attended by a physician. The increased acceptance of Certified Nurse Midwives (CNM) is indicated by the fact that although only 29 counties have licensed CNMs, they were the professional attendant at 6.4 percent of all hospital births. This represents a major increase from 1975 when only two percent of all births were attended by a CNM.

The median age of women who delivered children in 1986 was 25.8 years. The median age was slightly higher for whites, 26.2 years, than nonwhites, 24.1 years. The majority of infants (62%) were born to mothers between the ages of 20 and 30. Children born to mothers in the high risk age groups - adolescents aged 15 and under; adolescents between 16 and 18; and, women over the age of 35 - represented 15.6 percent of all births.

Mother's Age at Birth of Child
Florida Residents, 1986

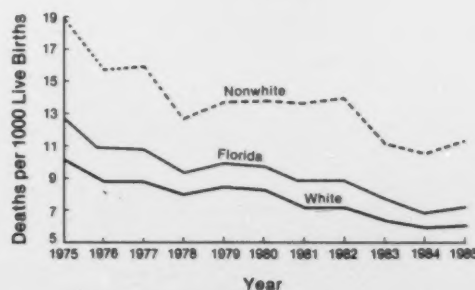

Source: HRS, 1987.

Adolescents 15 and under are considered to be at risk of having a problem pregnancy or a child with problems at birth for both medical and social reasons. Socially they are more likely to be unmarried, high school dropouts and unemployed. Lack of education, low income and problems with parental acceptance often cause these expectant mothers to ignore prenatal care. In 1985, 2077 adolescents aged 15 or less had babies: 1,290 (62%) were nonwhite and 787 were white (38%). Only 18 percent of the white mothers and two percent of the nonwhite mothers in this age group were married.

Women over the age of 35 and between 15 and 18 are also considered at risk of having a problem pregnancy. Contrary to popular belief, chronological age is not an independent indicator of risk for these women. They are considered at risk because they are more likely to have other characteristics that increase the chance of having a problem pregnancy. Teenage mothers, for example, are more likely to be less educated, unmarried and less likely to receive adequate prenatal care than older mothers. Mothers over the age of 35 may have had previous obstetrical or fertility problems; may have chronic medical conditions; may have a long history of alcohol, tobacco or drug use; or may be having their ninth or tenth child. Father's age becomes a potentially negative factor in the health of the fetus when the father is older than 50. It is more likely that women over the age of 35 will have partners over the age of 50 than women under age 35.

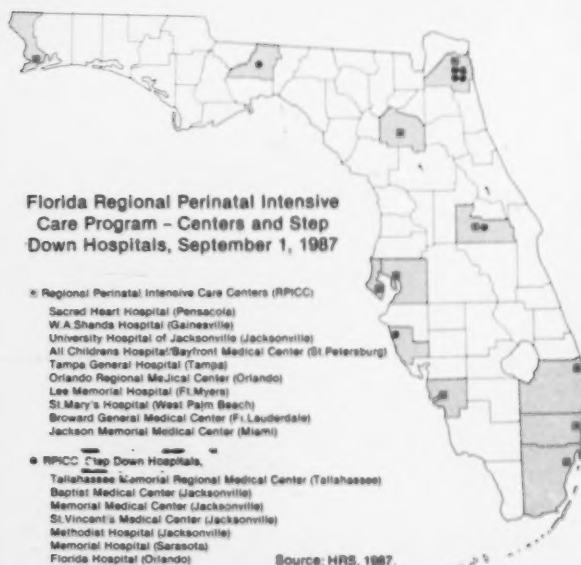

Neonatal Death Rates
Florida Residents
1975-1985

Source: HRS, 1987.

The health status of the newborn population can be assessed by looking at the neonatal mortality rate. Florida's neonatal death rate has declined steadily over the last ten years from 12.5 per 1000 in 1975 to 7.3 per 1000 in 1985. Although both the white and nonwhite neonatal death rates have declined almost 40 percent during this period, the rate for nonwhite infants remains almost twice the rate for white infants. In 1985, the white neonatal death rate was 6.0 per 1000 compared with the nonwhite neonatal death rate of 11.4.

Two factors in the overall decline in the neonatal death rate have been the RPICC and IPO programs. In addition to its obstetrical component, the RPICC program provides neonatal intensive care to critically ill newborns; step down medical services to infants who no longer require total support to maintain life, but who still require specialized medical care; and, developmental evaluation follow-up services to children who have received neonatal intensive care. The program provides neonatal intensive care services in a designated number of specialized centers located throughout the state. During the 1985-1986 fiscal year, 6,513 neonates received care in the neonatal intensive care units located in each of the ten RPICC hospitals. Step down neonatal care was provided to 404 infants at the RPICC hospitals and at seven additional RPICC step down hospitals in specialized units. Since the program's inception in 1974, nearly 51,000 critically ill newborns have been served by the RPICC program.

In 1985, the number of infant deaths during the 28-day neonatal period was 1203, more than half of which (680) occurred during the first 24 hours of life. The leading individual cause of death during both the first 24 hours (182 infants) and the entire neonatal period (194 infants) was "short gestation and unspecified low birth weight" followed by "respiratory distress syndrome" and "other respiratory conditions of newborn." Together the latter two causes accounted for 154 deaths during the first 24 hours and 308 deaths during the neonatal period. These single conditions are often combined with other conditions present, in either the mother or infant, before, during or at birth. This grouping, perinatal conditions, is the leading cause of death during the neonatal period. Congenital anomalies were responsible for 122 deaths during the first 24 hours and 281 deaths during the neonatal period.

Florida's newborn screening programs contribute to the improved health of Florida's neonatal population. The Infant Metabolic Screening Program screens all newborns for phenylketonuria (PKU), galactosemia, and hypothyroidism. Since PKU and galactosemia can both be regulated by diet and hypothyroidism can be regulated by medication, the early diagnosis of these metabolic disorders can prevent a lifetime of disability. The Infant Hearing Impairment Program provides for the screening of all newborns who meet predetermined risk factors for hearing impairment. Diagnosis and case management services are currently provided at only the ten RPICC hospitals.

Infant

Infant mortality is the total number of deaths which occur during the first year of life, including all neonatal deaths. In 1985, Florida's infant mortality rate was 11.3 deaths per 1000 live births. Although this rate was slightly higher than the national infant mortality rate of 10.55 per 1000 live births, the rate has shown a continually decreasing trend from its 1975 level of 17.7 per 1000. Data for 1986 show a further decrease in Florida's rate to 11.0 per 1000 per live births. During this period the nonwhite infant death rate has decreased by almost 40% from 28.7 per 1000 live births in 1975 to 17.3 per 1000 in 1985. The white infant death rate has decreased by a third from 13.8 in 1975 to 9.2 in 1985. Although the nonwhite infant death rate has shown a greater reduction, it remained at almost double the white infant death rate for 1985. Comparing the 1985 rate with the 1960 infant mortality rate clearly indicates the effectiveness of the medical, social and technical advances which have been focused on improving the quality of life for Florida's infants. In 1960, 46.1 of every 1000 nonwhite infants and 23.6 of every 1000 white infants died within the first year of life.

Certain counties consistently exhibit high infant death rates. Florida's average infant mortality rate for 1983-1985 was 11.43. Comparing individual county rates with the state average, five counties (Gadsden, Jefferson, Lafayette, Highlands and Glades) had average infant death rates greater than 17.0 per 1000 (150 percent of the Florida rate). Eight counties (Gulf, Wakulla, Madison, Levy, Bradford, Desoto, Hendry and St. Lucie) had rates greater than 14.3 per 1000 (125 percent of the Florida rate). A problem with using rates for comparison is evident when the actual number of deaths is noted for smaller counties. Glades and Lafayette had only four infant deaths during the three year period but because of the small number of births, their three year average rates are 18.6 and 24.2 per 1000 live births respectively. Gulf had six infant deaths in 1983, no infant deaths in 1984 and only one infant death in 1985 for a three year average rate of 16.13 per 1000 births. Thus, the standard errors of the rates for these small counties are very large. It is difficult to cite a single conclusive reason why some counties have higher infant mortality rates than others but all of the counties with higher rates had a greater proportion of their populations living below the poverty level than the state average and in three counties it was greater than twice the state rate (Gadsden, Jefferson and Madison). Several counties with high infant death rates during the three year period have high nonwhite populations (Bradford, Gadsden, Jefferson and Madison). Others had no Medicaid participating obstetricians, certified nurse midwives or pediatricians (Bradford, Glades, Jefferson, Lafayette, Levy and Wakulla). Two counties had unemployment rates almost double the state rate (Hendry and St. Lucie). Four counties had large migrant worker populations (Gadsden, Glades, Hendry and Highlands).

Of the 1,846 infants under the age of one year who died in Florida in 1985, 65.1 percent (1202 infants) died within the neonatal period. Approximately one third of the infants who died after the neonatal period were victims of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS). Of the 199 SIDS victims, 61 percent were white and 85 percent were under five months of age. Although research in the area of SIDS is still inconclusive, it is believed that prematurity is a significant contributor.

Throughout infancy the impact of low birthweight (2500 grams or less) is significant. On a national level, the Committee to Study the Prevention of Low Birthweight of the Institute of Medicine recently completed its report on low birthweight. The Committee concluded that low birthweight is a major determinant of both neonatal and infant mortality in the United States. Low birthweight infants are almost 40 times more likely to die during their first four weeks of life than the normal birthweight infant. Seven of the 13 Florida counties which had high infant death rates for the 1983-85 period also had higher percentages of low birthweight babies than the state average. Nationally two-thirds of deaths in the neonatal period occur among low birthweight infants.

The link between birthweight and death in the post-neonatal period is less pronounced but still significant. Low birthweight infants are five times more likely than normal birthweight infants to die later in the first year and account for 20 percent of post-neonatal deaths. Low birthweight infants are three times as likely as normal birthweight infants to have neurodevelopmental handicaps; are more likely to have significant congenital anomalies than normal birthweight infants and are more susceptible to conditions such as lower respiratory tract infections. In addition to prolonged hospitalization at birth, almost 40 percent of very low birthweight infants are rehospitalized more than once during the first year, for an average of 16 days. This compares with a rehospitalization rate of 19 percent for all low birthweight infants with an average stay of 12.5 days. Only 8.7 percent of normal birthweight infants are rehospitalized for an average stay of eight days.

In Florida, the Maternal and Child Health Task Force in their report "Maternity Care for Low Income Pregnant Women" identified the single greatest health care problem in Florida as low birthweight infants. Florida has established a goal to reduce the rate of low birthweight infants from the 1985 rate of 7.43 per 1000 live births to 3.95 live births per 1000 by 1990. It has been shown that a woman with a full series of prenatal visits has only a two percent chance of having a low birthweight baby while a woman with no prenatal care has a nine percent risk of having a low birthweight baby. The Improved Pregnancy Outcome (IPO) program, targeted at the mother and unborn child during the prenatal period, is expected to be the major contributor toward the statewide achievement of this goal.

Preschool and School Age Children

In 1985 there were 1,672,688 children between the ages of one and 14 in Florida, representing 14.7 percent of the population. Children in this age group have the lowest mortality rate of any group in Florida. Mortality rates were .878 per 1000 for the younger preschool children (ages 1-4) and .342 per 1000 for school age children aged 5-14. Unlike children under the age of one, children in this age group are more likely to die from accidents (392 in 1985) or homicide (45 in 1985) than from disease or illness. The five leading causes of death for the 1-14 age group were accidents, congenital anomalies, homicide, heart disease and cancer. However, the total number of deaths in this age group was so small, 711, that in some instances, two to five deaths determined the rankings of causes of death. The order varied slightly between the younger and older children.

Accidents were the leading cause of death in both age groups. These deaths were primarily from drownings and other situations resulting from children not knowing the dangers of the environment and motor vehicle accidents. Most of these deaths are preventable; deaths from environmental factors through careful monitoring of children's activities and motor vehicle deaths through use of seat belts and child restraints. The use of car seats and seat belts can greatly reduce the potential for a lethal accident. In 1985, motor vehicle accidents resulted in the deaths of 81 children under the age of six. In a Florida Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles study of 1985 fatalities involving children under the age of six in passenger cars, only two of 20 children killed were using safety restraints. Children under the age of six are required by Chapter 316, Florida Statutes, to use a crash tested, federally approved child restraint when riding in a motor vehicle. Children under the age of three must be in a separate carrier while children ages three through five may use seat belts depending on the size of the child.

Congenital anomalies were the second leading cause of death for preschool children and the fourth leading cause of death for school age children. Although this is a leading cause of death, only 57 children were victims of these diseases thus making the total impact much less significant than during the first year of life when 395 infants died from congenital anomalies.

Children are vulnerable to abuse and neglect, which can result not only in injuries or disease but sometimes in death. Many deaths to Florida children which are categorized as homicides may be the result of child abuse. Children under the age of 15 were involved in approximately 84 percent of all the incidents of abuse and neglect in Florida in 1985. Although the number of deaths from child abuse was small (ten in 1985), the long term effects of child abuse can include both physical and psychological problems which may not be manifested for several years. Investigation of child abuse complaints has shown that the majority of these children were neglected (63%); 36 percent were physically abused; 7.8 percent were sexually abused and 5.8 percent suffered mental injury (emotional abuse or neglect). School age children were twice as likely to be sexually abused as preschool children. Nonwhite children were proportionately overrepresented in child abuse and neglect incidents. The proportion of nonwhite children in the total child population was 21.8 percent yet they represented 28.4 percent of all indicated reports of abuse and neglect.

In the last ten years, the number of reports of children abused and neglected in Florida has increased by over 150 percent. Florida's reporting rate for abuse and neglect was 34 alleged victims per 1000 children in 1985 compared with a national rate of 23.6 alleged incidents per 1000. Investigations completed on reports received during 1985 found that 58.5 percent of the reports were "indicated." This means that credible evidence was obtained which would cause a reasonable person to assume that abuse or neglect had occurred. Florida's indicated rate of 18 per 1000 children is more than double the national rate of 7.6 per 1000. In 1985 Columbia County had the highest indicated rate of 60 per 1000 while Flagler County had the lowest indicated rate, 10.0 per 1000.

Dispositions of indicated cases reflect Florida's policy of working with children and families to keep the family together, whenever possible, rather than removing the child from the home environment. Dispositions range from the most intrusive, removal and placement of the child (foster care) or involuntary, court ordered supervision of the child and family (protective services) to the least intrusive in which no further action is taken beyond the investigation. Factors considered in making a disposition include the severity of the case, the degree of protection required for the child, the service needs of the family and the availability of resources. In 63 percent of the indicated cases of child abuse or neglect there was no further action taken by the department after the initial investigation. Only 11 percent of the children were taken into protective custody, while three percent were referred to pre-protective services and four percent were placed in foster care. Nineteen percent were referred to other HRS programs or to other agencies or organizations or were included in other dispositions such as judicial warnings and transfers of custody to relatives. Throughout the state, Child Protection Teams have been formed to enhance and support the services provided by the state child protective services office. Each team functions under the supervision of a pediatric medical director and includes physicians, social workers, nurses, attorneys, psychologists, psychiatrists, and law enforcement liaisons. In 1986-87, 19 Child Protection Teams provided medical and psychological diagnosis, evaluation and short term follow up treatment; expert court testimony; team staffing and coordination of services to an estimated 19,645 children and families.

Cancer and heart disease, diseases normally associated with old age, begin to emerge as significant causes of death during the early childhood years. The rates and numbers, however, are still very low. Between the ages of one and 14, cancer was responsible for 69 deaths and heart disease for 30 deaths. Among preschool children, deaths due to heart disease have almost quadrupled in the last ten years from five in 1975 to 19 in 1985. Heart disease has risen from the tenth leading cause of death to fourth among preschoolers. This may be due to the increasing life expectancy of children born with congenital heart defects. Among the school age children, deaths due to heart disease have remained fairly constant at between 10 and 20 per year since 1975.

Communicable diseases no longer result in high death rates for children. In the past 20 years, mandatory immunization programs have significantly reduced the incidence of polio, measles, mumps, rubella, diphtheria, tetanus and pertussis. In 1964, Florida recorded 22,418 cases of these childhood diseases while in 1985, there were 294 cases. Chapter 232, Florida Statutes, requires that prior to entry to school all children receive a medical examination and prescribed immunizations against communicable diseases. The required immunization schedule follows the recommendations of the American Academy of Pediatrics and the U.S. Public Health Service. It includes the Trivalent Oral Polio Vaccine series, Diphtheria and Tetanus Toxoids and Pertussis Vaccine (DTP), Measles, Mumps, Rubella Vaccine (MMR).

During the 1986-87 school year, 95.4 percent of all children entering school in Florida had met the immunization requirement. Jefferson and Gilchrist counties had 100 percent compliance and, Calhoun, Gulf and Hamilton counties had 99.4 percent compliance with the immunization requirement. In the ten most populous counties, however, only Duval and Brevard counties had compliance rates above 95 percent. Volusia County (the tenth most populous county) had the lowest compliance rate in the state with only 89.5 percent. Dade County (the most populous county) had a compliance rate of 91.3 percent. Public health officials are concerned with declining compliance rates which may stem from parental fears of side effects from the vaccines used in immunization programs. Although Florida has recorded a few cases of severe adverse vaccine reactions, some parents would rather risk the disease than the side effects.

During the preschool and school age years the emphasis in health care is on prevention. To complement the mandatory seatbelt requirements for children under the age of six, and the school entry immunization and medical examination requirements, Florida also has a statewide school health screening program. Chapter 402, Florida Statutes, requires schools to periodically provide vision, hearing, growth and development screenings, nutrition assessments, and preventive dental health. Between October 1985 and October 1986, there were 618,565 vision screenings; 385,991 hearing screenings; 230,998 nursing assessments; 237,262 scoliosis screenings; 159 nutrition assessments; 243,053 height and weight assessments; 14,316 nutritional assessments with counselling; and 48,725 medical examinations provided through the schools. Children with abnormal conditions identified through the screening programs were referred for follow up assessment and treatment. During the same period, treatment services were provided to 38,071 children with vision problems; 22,356 children with hearing problems; 7,812 children as a result of nursing assessments; 18,707 children with scoliosis; 5,425 children with nutritional problems; 27,512 children with problems associated with growth and maturation; and 26 as a result of a medical examination.

Adolescents and Young Adults Ages 15-24

Adolescents (ages 15-19) and young adults (ages 20-24) comprised 17.08 percent of Florida's 1985 population. These groups contained slightly more males (50.4%) than females and more than three times as many whites (77.2%) as nonwhites. The overall death rate for this group (.947 per 1000) is higher than the rate for both the preschool (.878 per 1000) and school age groups (.342 per 1000), but is far lower than the infant mortality rate of 14.45 per 1000. Like the preschool and school age children, more adolescents and young adults died from accidents and homicides than disease or illness.

In reviewing the graph of the probability of death by age and cause group, the 15-24 age group deviates significantly from the trend line that would be expected based solely on biological conditions. This deviation is attributable to a significant increase in the rate of deaths due to violent and unnatural causes—accidents, homicide and suicide, which are the three leading causes of deaths during this period of life. The accident rate of .479 per 1000 is considerably higher than the school age rate (.177 per 1000), the preschool rate (.392 per 1000) and the infant rate (.415 per 1000). The homicide rate for this group was also significantly higher than the rates of both the preschool and school age children. Adolescents and young adults had a homicide rate of .138 per 1000 compared with a rate of .02 per 1000 for the school age group and .047 for the preschool group. A disturbing indicator of the health of the 15-24 age group is the fact that the rates for homicide and suicide have been increasing since 1960. In 1960 the homicide rate for this group was .098 per 1000. It gradually increased to a peak of .233 per 1000 in 1980. In 1985 the rate was .138 per 1000. A more dramatic increase is evident in the suicide rate for this group. In 1960 the suicide rate was .066 per 1000, by 1977 it had increased to .160 per 1000. Although it has declined somewhat in the last five years, the 1985 rate of .119 was still almost double the 1960 rate. There are a number of factors, including alcohol abuse, drug abuse and crime, which contribute to the high violent death rate.

Alcohol abuse is particularly dangerous to adolescents and young adults when an inexperienced driver combines drinking and driving. In the 15-24 age group, 932 deaths in 1985 were due to accidents; motor vehicle accidents accounted for 725 (77.8%) of these deaths. An individual may obtain a Florida driver's license at the age of 16 and a learner's permit at 15. Mortality data indicate that many of the motor vehicle accident deaths were young drivers. Of course, in the preschool and school age groups most victims were pedestrians or passengers. Many of the other deaths were to passengers in cars driven by other adolescents. The Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles analysis of 4,016 drivers involved in fatal accidents in 1985 shows that 1,099 drivers (27.36%) were between the ages of 16 and 24. A total of 437,391 drivers were involved in motor vehicle accidents in Florida in 1985. Drivers between the ages of 16 and 24 represented 29.46 percent of the total. Even though the legal age for drinking alcohol in Florida was 19 in 1985, drivers under age 19 who had been drinking were involved in 4.87 percent of fatal accidents and 4.14 percent of all accidents. Drivers between the ages of 16 and 24 represented 35.53 percent (13,229) of all drivers (37,232) who had been drinking and who were involved in accidents and 31.1 percent (322) of all drivers (1,030) who had been drinking and who were involved in fatal accidents.

The use of illegal drugs also frequently begins during adolescence. During the 1985-86 fiscal year, 47.6 percent of persons admitted to drug rehabilitation programs in Florida were under the age of 24. Of all persons admitted to drug rehabilitation programs, 59.3 percent began the use of their primary drug of abuse when they were between the ages of 15 and 24. The primary drugs used were marijuana (37.8 percent of admissions) and cocaine (36.1 percent of admissions). Drug use is indicative of populations for whom the regulatory effects of society's norms are either challenged or unaccepted. It can lead to death from an accidental drug overdose or from a motor vehicle accident while driving under the influence of drugs. Drug abuse may also lead to crime, especially when users need funds to support their habits.

The increased incidence of death by homicide is indicative of a general increase in the level of participation in dangerous and violent activities. Florida Department of Law Enforcement data show that the 15-24 age group represented 22.78 percent of all arrests for violent crimes (murder, forcible rape, armed robbery and aggravated assault) in 1985. They were significantly overrepresented in arrests for armed robbery at 31.47 percent. Adolescents and young adults may be the victims as well as the perpetrators of violence.

As previously noted, the suicide rate for the 15-24 age group was .119 per 1000 in 1985, almost double the 1960 rate. Developmentally adolescents and, to a certain extent, young adults are going through a tumultuous period as they define their role vis-a-vis society. They must come to terms with society's various definitions of adulthood: one may operate a motor vehicle at 16; vote, marry and defend the United States at 18; but not drink alcoholic beverages until age 21. Adolescents and young adults are not only trying to discover their identities, but also to clarify sexual roles, assert their independence, cope with varying authority and search for goals which give meaning to their lives. They must contend with the daily pressures of school, vacillating relationships with peers and increasing responsibilities. If additional stress is placed on them from family conflicts, the death of a loved one or friend, or the divorce or separation of their parents they frequently have insufficient personal resources to cope and the result may be suicide.

Suicide is the third leading cause of death for this age group. Although suicide rarely occurs before the age of 12, the rate rapidly increases after this age. There was only one death attributed to suicide prior to age 12 in Florida in 1985. There were three at age 13 and four at age 14. At age 15, however, there were 11 deaths attributed to suicide. This number increased throughout the age group to a high of 39 at age 23. A total of 232 deaths were attributed to suicide in the 15-24 age group. The scope of the problem of teenage and young adult suicide, however, goes beyond just the number who are successful. It is estimated that for every successful teenage suicide there are between 50 and 150 attempted suicides. Some studies show that 10 percent of male teenagers and 2.9 percent of female teenagers who attempt suicide will eventually die of suicide. Florida is one of the few states to pass legislation addressing the problems of youth suicide. Chapter 230.2313, Florida Statutes, calls for cooperative efforts between the Departments of Education and HRS in developing an effective means to reduce the incidence of youth suicide.

Another indicator of the social disorganization which frequently accompanies the teenage years is the number of teenage pregnancies which are both unwanted and illegitimate. In 1985, 13.8 percent (22,620) of the babies born in Florida were to teenage mothers. Of this group, 32.0 percent of the teenage mothers were unmarried. National data further indicate that 26.1 percent of all abortions are to teenagers. Using these figures and adjusting for the normal miscarriage rate, approximately 33,047 teenagers were pregnant in 1985. The impact of a teenage pregnancy can be devastating. In many cases, the father is absent and the mother lacks the maturity, education and parenting skills necessary to raise a child. Teenage mothers have an 85 percent school dropout rate during their pregnancy and 61 percent never graduate. Their income earning potential and employment opportunities are greatly reduced.

Figures on teenage pregnancy show that teenagers are sexually active, but are frequently not involved in a stable relationship. A serious health concern for sexually active teenagers and young adults is sexually transmitted disease. Persons between the ages of 15 and 24 represented 54.5 percent of the reported cases of gonorrhea and 35.9 percent of the reported cases of primary and secondary syphilis in Florida in 1986. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and herpes are also major health problems, primarily because there is no known cure and individuals may continue to spread these infections either knowingly or unwittingly. Lack of knowledge about prevention and sex with multiple partners contribute to the rapid spread of these diseases in young adults. Individuals may fail to seek proper treatment due to fear of parental sanctions, embarrassment, lack of funds or simple ignorance of the dangers of these diseases which can lead not only to increased spread of the diseases but also to complications later in life.

The control of sexually transmissible diseases in the young adult age group is a particular problem for military authorities since most recruits enter the service at this age. They may be infected upon induction or contract a disease while in the service. Medical personnel have identified several isolates of Neisseria gonorrhoeae resistant to selected antibiotics which have been introduced into the population by military personnel after contracting the diseases overseas. Penicillinase producing Neisseria gonorrhoeae (PPNG), which is resistant to penicillin, was the first of these diseases to be identified after the Vietnam War. Its incidence has more than doubled in Florida between 1984 and 1986. Additional strains, which are resistant to tetracycline and spectinomycin, have more recently been identified. A recent report released by the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research which appeared in The New England Journal of Medicine, indicated that eight percent of the servicemen infected with gonorrhea in Korea had strains which could withstand spectinomycin. Penicillin now fails to cure gonorrhea in about four percent of cases and tetracycline fails in about five percent of cases. In addition to penicillin, tetracycline and spectinomycin, gonorrhea can be treated with ceftriaxone and a new class of drugs called carboxyquinolones. Although there is no shortage of drugs to treat gonorrhea, the newer drugs are several times more expensive than penicillin or tetracycline and some are given by injection instead of as pills.

Because of its high fatality rate (64% in Florida), Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) has become the most serious sexually transmissible disease. Individuals in the 15-24 and 25-34 age groups are at the highest risk of contracting AIDS as a result of casual sexual activity. Because of a lengthy incubation period, it may be several years before the AIDS virus produces complications severe enough to cause death. Thus many AIDS deaths occur in the 25-44 age group rather than in the 15-24 cohort even though the diseases may have been contracted at the earlier age. Through May 1987, Florida had recorded 2684 AIDS cases and 1720 deaths.

Chronic diseases are a minimal problem in the 15-24 age group when compared to violent deaths. Although, cancer and heart disease were the fourth and fifth leading causes of death, the rates were not significantly greater than the rates for the preschool or school age groups. Cancer rates were slightly higher than the rates for both younger groups, while the rate for heart disease was slightly higher than the school age rate and lower than the preschool rate.

Adults Ages 25-44

Adults between the ages of 25 and 44 comprised 26.6 percent of Florida's population in 1985. There were slightly more females (50.7%) than males and almost five times as many whites (82.5%) as nonwhites. The overall death rate for this age group is significantly greater than the rate for the adolescent and young adult group. Relative to the younger age group the death rate for persons 25-34 increased 55.4 percent to 1.472 per 1000 and the rate for persons 35-44 increased another 86.3 percent to 2.742 per 1000. Despite these increases, the rate was only 19 percent of the infant death rate. The predominant causes of death during this age period are violence (accidents, homicide, and suicide); however, cancer and heart disease become significant at the end of this age span.

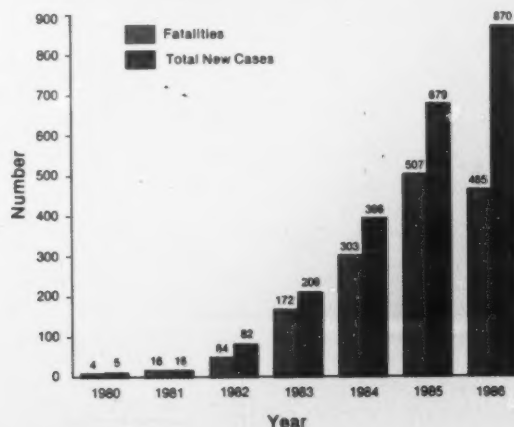

In the 25-34 group, although the death rates increased for all causes except accidental deaths, the rankings remained the same as for the adolescents and young adults (accidents, homicide, suicide, cancer and heart disease). The homicide rate increased 61.6 percent to .223 per 1000 and the suicide rate increased 67.2 percent to .199 per 1000. The rate of deaths from cancer almost tripled to .13 per 1000 and the rate of deaths caused by heart disease more than tripled to .072 per 1000.

In the 35-44 group, the rates of deaths from accidents, homicide and suicide remained about the same as for the 25-34 age group but the rates of deaths from cancer and heart disease increased significantly. The rate of death from cancer increased by a factor of four from .13 per 1000 to .568 per 1000 making cancer the leading cause of death. The rate of death from heart disease increased approximately six times from .072 per 1000 to .436 per 1000 making heart disease the third leading cause of death, just below accidents.

Florida was the third leading state, following Texas and California, in the number of motor vehicle deaths in 1985. Most traffic accidents (71.4%) occurred within the driver's county of residence. Alcohol was involved in 14.27 percent of all accidents and 45 percent of all motor vehicle fatalities in 1985. Franklin County had a higher percentage (42.31%) of alcohol-related accidents than any other county. Dade County, although it had the second highest number of accidents, had the lowest percentage (6.28%) of alcohol-related accidents in the state. Drivers between the ages of 25-34 were responsible for more accidents, and more motor vehicle deaths, both alcohol and non alcohol related, than any other age group. In an effort to reduce the number of motor vehicle fatalities, Chapter

316.614, Florida Statutes was enacted which requires the use of safety belts by drivers and front seat passengers.

Emergency Medical Services

Violent deaths due to accidents, homicides, and suicides were the leading cause of death of persons between the ages of one and 44 and the fourth leading cause of death for the total population. These three causes accounted for 8,335 deaths in Florida in 1985 with motor vehicle accidents responsible for 2,936 deaths. Suicide was responsible for 1,854 deaths and 1,352 Floridians were the victims of homicide during 1985. Although not all violent deaths can be prevented, the timely and appropriate response to a medical emergency by skilled personnel can be the deciding factor in the severity or possible mortality of a trauma injury or acute illness.

From 1975 to 1985, Florida's death rate due to accidents decreased largely as a result of increased medical technology and better trained and more mobile emergency medical response units. The 1975 accident death rate was 50.2 deaths per 100,000 persons; by 1985 this rate had declined to 45.8. Emergency medical services, which are provided prior to a person's arrival at a hospital or medical facility, provide critical response to trauma or acute illness at the scene.

In Florida, pre-hospital 24 hour emergency medical services are provided by county-based ground ambulance services. These ground services are augmented by regional and, in some areas, county helicopter ambulance services. Ground ambulance services are licensed as either a Basic Life Support Service (BLS) or as an Advanced Life Support Service (ALS). All emergency air ambulances maintain an ALS license. A BLS ambulance is staffed by an emergency medical technician (EMT) and a driver. The EMT is authorized to provide treatment only through the use of non-invasive techniques such as cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), splinting, obstetrical assistance, bandaging, administration of oxygen, or the application of medical anti-shock trousers. Under the supervision of a medical director, an ALS ambulance is staffed by an EMT, a paramedic and a driver. A paramedic on an ALS ambulance is authorized to use invasive techniques such as endotracheal intubation, administration of drugs or intravenous fluids, and cardiac monitoring and defibrillation.

Approximately 98 percent of Florida's population have access to an ALS ground ambulance through ALS ground ambulance services licensed in 52 counties. Only BLS licensed ground ambulance systems are available in 14 rural counties (Walton, Holmes, Calhoun, Franklin, Liberty, Gulf, Taylor, Hamilton, Jefferson, Madison, Desoto, Glades, Levy and Gilchrist) for pre-hospital emergency services. Lafayette County has no county based EMS service but contracts with neighboring Suwannee County for ALS service.

Regional emergency helicopter ambulances provide evacuation and ALS emergency back up services throughout Florida. Units located in Escambia, Leon, Duval, Alachua, Volusia, Orange, Pinellas, Lee and Dade counties provide services when required, within a 150 mile radius of their county base. Additional county emergency helicopter ambulances in Hillsborough, St. Lucie, Collier, Broward, Palm Beach and Sarasota counties provide intracounty evacuation and ancillary emergency services. Especially in rural areas, utilizing the emergency helicopter ambulance can decrease the response time for EMS personnel to the scene and delivery of the patient to a hospital, trauma center or spinal cord injury center for care. A patient picked up by helicopter within 50 miles of the helicopter's base could expect delivery to an emergency medical facility within the critical first hour after injury. Because receipt of medical services during this first hour is so critical to positive patient outcome, it is often referred to as the "golden hour." Once a patient is stabilized, the helicopters and other aircraft are often used to transport the patient to a more specialized treatment facility. The 1987 Florida Legislature requested that the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services develop by January 1, 1988 a service plan for air medical evacuation services in areas not adequately served and to supplement existing services in other areas.

Hospital emergency care is provided at hospital emergency rooms, trauma centers and designated spinal cord injury centers. As of September 1, 1987, Florida had 21 verified trauma centers, classified by levels, which provided emergency care. A Level 3 trauma center, the lowest level, meets minimum standards for emergency care. Each successive level center meets more stringent requirements regarding surgical, trauma and non-surgical services; staffing; equipment inventory; intensive care units; clinical laboratory services; radiology and hemodialysis units; and, quality assurance and training programs. A Level 1 trauma center must also have an active trauma research program. Florida hospitals can voluntarily apply to the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services for verification as a trauma center. The 1987 Florida Legislature authorized the addition of a ten cent surcharge on all motor vehicle registrations to fund trauma systems development. These funds are to be used for the development of a systemized approach to the delivery of trauma care.

Florida's Spinal Cord Injury Centers are designated by the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation of the Florida Department of Labor and Employment Security. They provide immediate emergency care and long term rehabilitation programs for victims of spinal cord injuries. Ten Spinal Cord Injury Centers are located throughout the state. Spinal cord injuries are classified as either complete or incomplete. A complete spinal cord injury usually means some degree of permanent spinal cord paralysis whereas an incomplete injury may provide a chance for full recuperation. Since their designation in 1979, the percentages of persons treated at the centers with complete injuries has declined from 55% to 48%. This reduction in the percentage of complete injuries may be attributed to the increased skill in handling injuries during the initial 24 hour period after injury by both pre-hospital EMS and hospital staff.

Adults Ages 45-64

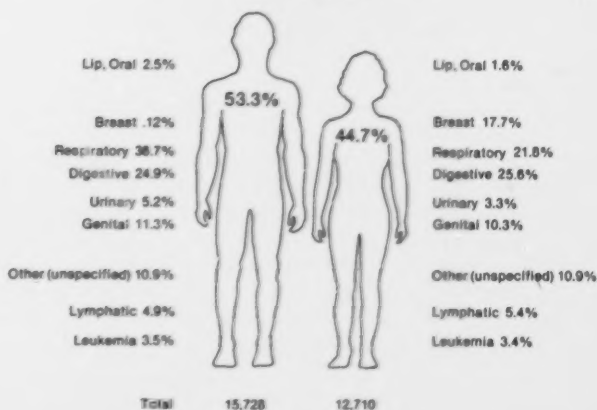

In 1985, 21.6 percent of Florida's population was between the ages of 45 and 64. There were slightly more females (53.7%) than males and almost nine times as many whites (89.1%) as nonwhites. The death rate for this population showed a marked increase over the previous age group. The rate for persons between the ages of 45-54 was 5.47 per 1000 and the rate for persons 55-64 was 11.17 per 1000. Although the overall rate for the group was still below the infant death rate, the death rate for persons age 60 and older was higher than the infant death rate.

Persons in this age group were more likely to die from chronic diseases resulting in part from lifestyle, environmental conditions and occupational hazards rather than from violent causes. The leading causes of death for persons over the age of 45 were cancer and heart disease. As shown on page 1, death rates rise steadily throughout this age group. For persons between the ages of 45 and 54, the death rate for cancer was 1.80 per 1000 while the rate for heart disease was 1.434 per 1000. For persons between the ages of 55 and 64, the rate of death for both causes was more than twice as high: 3.998 per 1000 for cancer and 3.583 per 1000 for heart disease.

Cigarette smoking has been identified as a major cause of both heart disease and certain kinds of cancer. In a 1983 report on cardiovascular disease, the Surgeon General of the United States provided convincing statistics on the link between heart disease and cigarette smoking. The report indicated that cigarette smokers experience a 70 percent greater death rate due to coronary heart disease; had a twofold greater incidence of coronary heart disease; and a two to four times greater risk of sudden death. Heavy smokers (two to three packs a day) have a 100 to 200 percent greater coronary heart disease death rate than do nonsmokers. Women who use oral contraceptives and who smoke increase their risk of myocardial infarction by approximately ten times compared with women who neither use oral contraceptives nor smoke. This combination also increases the risk for subarachnoid hemorrhage among women. Since women in this age group were in their childbearing years prior to the research which revealed this link, it is highly likely that many were subject to this combination of risk factors. A more positive finding of the Surgeon General's report was that cessation of smoking results in a substantial reduction in coronary heart disease rates compared with persons who continue to smoke. Approximately ten years following cessation, the coronary heart disease death rate for those ex-smokers who previously consumed less than a pack of cigarettes daily is virtually identical to that of lifelong nonsmokers. For ex-smokers who had smoked more than one pack a day, the residual risk of coronary heart disease mortality is proportional to the total lifetime exposure to cigarette smoke.

Smoking is the major cause of lung cancer throughout the world. Individuals who smoke cigarettes have the highest risk of developing lung cancer and heavy cigarette smokers have thirty times the normal risk of dying from the disease. Lung cancer accounted for 28.6 percent of all deaths due to cancer in Florida in 1985. The combination of heavy smoking and heavy alcohol consumption is frequently associated with cancers of the esophagus, throat and mouth. All tobacco users (including pipe, cigar, and smokeless tobacco) are at risk for cancers of the mouth, throat and bladder.

Although 70 percent of persons who died from cancer in Florida in 1985 were over the age of 65, cancer was the leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 45-64. The seemingly late onset of cancer is misleading due to its long latency period. Cancers which will appear in 20 or 30 years are being caused now by lifestyle (smoking) and other conditions. Some of the known causes of cancer include heredity, radiation, and chemicals.

A rare cancer of the eye (retinoblastoma) and a rare cancer of the thyroid (medullary carcinoma) have been identified as genetically transmitted. Some pre-cancerous conditions, such as polyps in the colon (familial polyposis) and a rare skin disease (xeroderma pigmentosum) are also passed within families. Other types of cancer tend to recur in families but it has not been determined whether this recurrence is due to genetic or environmental factors. Cancers of the large intestine, stomach, lungs, prostate, breasts and the lining of the uterus generally are included in this category.

Radiation includes exposure to the sun as well as X-rays, radioactive substances and cosmic rays. Because of Florida's outdoor lifestyle and year round sunshine, this can be of particular concern. Cancers of the skin, which are most frequently caused by exposure to the sun, accounted for only 521 deaths or 1.83 percent of all deaths due to cancer in 1985 and are among the most curable forms of the disease.

In addition to the carcinogens contained in tobacco, a number of industrial chemicals, food additives and environmental pollutants have been identified as causing cancer, some only recently. Persons between the ages of 45-64, therefore, may have been unaware of the cancer risks involved in certain hazardous occupations. Among those identified in the last few years have been jobs involved with asbestos installation and manufacture; uranium production; and some petrochemical refining. Food additives, such as saccharin, red dye #2 and nitrites, had been used by Americans for many years prior to their identification as carcinogens. Environmental carcinogens such as radon, radium, ethylene dibromide, or polychlorinated biphenols have only recently been identified and monitored.

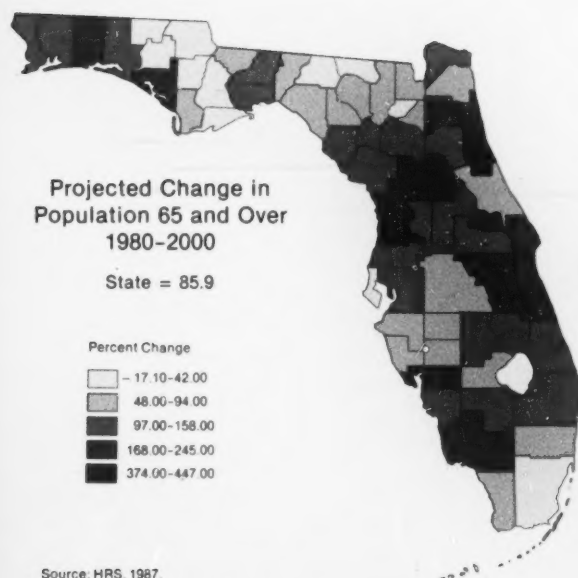

Cerebrovascular disease (stroke) emerges as a leading cause of death within the 45-64 age group. The rate for persons between the ages of 55-64 (.476 per 1000) was slightly more than double the rate for persons between the ages of 45-54 (.233 per 1000). This increase continues throughout the later years of life. Hypertension, often as a result of or associated with atherosclerosis, is the most frequent cause of strokes. Obesity is also considered a contributing factor. Both hypertension and obesity may be reactions to occupational, social and environmental stresses which accumulate during a person's lifetime and frequently peak during this age period. The inability of individuals to regulate emotional and physiological responses to stressful events is a critical handicap during a period which often encompasses such stressful situations as the increased financial demands of college education, a parent's death, children leaving home, retirement, etc. However, the exact mechanism by which stress may cause disease is still unclear.

The fourth leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 45-54 (.265 per 1000) and the fifth leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 55-64 (.358 per 1000) in 1985 was chronic liver disease and cirrhosis. This is the only age group which showed chronic liver disease and cirrhosis of the liver as a leading cause of death. Like cancer and to some extent heart disease and stroke, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis can also be attributed to lifestyle and are more frequently the result of abuse rather than solely the aging process. The liver can be damaged by alcoholism—it is estimated that 15 percent of all alcoholics have a cirrhotic liver—and some industrial or agricultural processes can result in damaging exposure to chemicals which the liver is unable to detoxify. In 1985, alcohol was cited as the cause in approximately one third of all deaths due to cirrhosis of the liver. Between 1960 and 1973, the rate of deaths attributed to chronic liver disease and cirrhosis of the liver showed a steady increase, but since then it has shown a constant decrease. This recent trend may be due to the emphasis on alcohol prevention and moderation as well as the public's switch to beverages low in alcoholic content (light beer and wine coolers).

Accidents are not as much of a factor in death rates for older adults as they are for younger age groups. Accidents were the third leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 45-54 with a rate of .37 per 1000, significantly lower than the rates of younger adult age groups. Motor vehicle deaths were the leading cause of death within this category. At a rate of .302 per 1000, accidents were not a leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 55-64.

Chronic obstructive lung disease (C.O.L.D.) which includes bronchitis, emphysema and asthma was the fourth leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 55-64. In more than 80 percent of all cases, emphysema is a direct consequence of smoking. The alveoli (air sacs) of the lungs lose their elasticity, overexpand, and then may rupture and form cysts. Carbon dioxide cannot be completely expelled and accumulates within the lungs, thus interfering with normal breathing. Other respiratory disorders are frequently a result of exposure to irritants which accumulate in the alveoli and which can be further aggravated by smoking. Farmer's lung is perhaps the best known of a group of occupational lung disorders caused by the inhalation of vegetable dusts (spores) and is directly traceable to exposure to moldy hay. Other agricultural related causes include bagassosis, traceable to the moldy fibers of sugar cane; maple bark stripper's pneumonitis; and mushroom pickers' lung. Silicosis is associated with various aspects of mining, as well as pottery making, sandblasting and work in quarries and foundries. Although Florida may not have a sizable work force in these occupations, its retirement community draws from all geographic areas. To persons genetically predisposed to lung disease, even smog and other common air pollutants may act as irritants. In many instances, the effects may take several decades to manifest themselves, thus postponing recognition of the ongoing progress of tissue damage. This is why C.O.L.D. appears for the first time as a leading cause of death after age 55. Similar to the occupational, personal and environmental hazards which have been linked to cancer, only during this age group's lifetime were research studies focused on the impact of these risks. And only after the personal impact felt by the families and friends of persons afflicted with C.O.L.D. and cancer, caused in part by occupational and environmental hazards, have public awareness and prevention programs become effective.

Elderly Adults (65 and over)

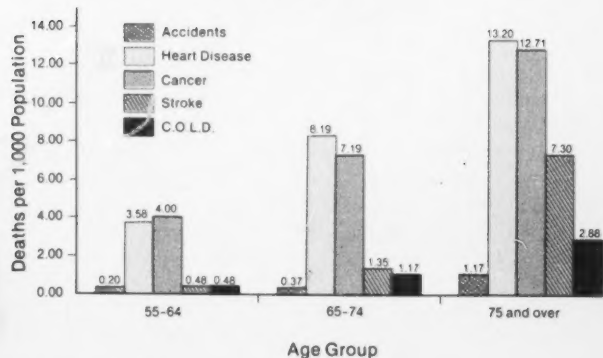

In 1985 adults over the age of 65 comprised 18.78% of Florida's resident population. This elderly population, however, is projected to grow at a faster rate than the population as a whole. The over 85 age cohort will have the greatest percentage increase among all age cohorts. According to the most recent population estimates from the Bureau of Economic and Business Research at the University of Florida, by the year 2000, the Florida population is projected to increase by 56 percent over the 1980 population while the "over 85" population is expected to grow by 210 percent.

The mean age of the over 65 population is also increasing. By the year 2000, the number of centenarians is expected to be quadruple the number in 1986. In 1980, Florida had 1,487 centenarians. Of this group, 65.29 percent were between the ages of 100 and 104, 19.9 percent were between the ages of 105-109, and 14.79 percent were older than 110. Only 12.97 percent of the centenarians were living in group settings, primarily nursing homes. For every male centenarian there were two female centenarians. Only 13 percent were never married and 33.9 percent were currently married in 1980.

The increased life expectancy of females over males becomes readily apparent in this age group. At birth the ratio of males to females is approximately 105 to 100. This ratio falls gradually through life. By the ages of 50-54, the ratio has reversed, 103.4 females to 100 males. This increase in the ratio of females to males continues throughout later life. In 1985, the age group 65-69 was 56.5% female; the age group 75-79 was 59.6% female and over the age of 85 there were almost twice as many females (64.4%) as males (35.6%).

As shown on page 1, this age group has higher mortality rates than any other age group. The rate for persons between the ages of 65-74 was 22.588 per 1000 and the rate for persons over the age of 75 was 72.043 per 1000. Consistently throughout this older age group heart disease, cancer, stroke and chronic obstructive lung disease continue to be the leading causes of death. The mortality rates from these diseases, which have long developmental stages, significantly increase with age. The rate of death due to heart disease, for example more than doubles (8.19 per 1000) for persons between the ages of 65-74 over the rate for persons between the ages of 55-64 (3.58 per 1000). For persons over the age of 75 the rate of death due to heart disease again almost quadruples to 32 per 1000.

The fifth leading cause of death for persons aged 65-74 was diabetes mellitus. In most cases diabetes can be effectively controlled by diet and drug therapy, but can still be a major contributing factor in morbidity and mortality. Childhood onset diabetes when controlled by insulin has a survival expectation of approximately 40 years after diagnosis. Adult onset diabetes, if left untreated, has a survival expectation of approximately eight years after diagnosis. With treatment and nutritional control, persons with adult onset diabetes are still twice as likely to develop heart disease and stroke; five times as likely to develop gangrene in the leg and foot; 17 times more likely to develop kidney disease and 25 times more likely to become blind than non-diabetics.

The fifth leading cause of death for persons over the age of 75 was pneumonia and influenza. The ability of the body to recover from infections is usually decreased with age. Elderly persons who are weakened by serious or chronic diseases have even more difficulty recovering from infections. Cigarette smoking, alcoholism and obesity contribute to this susceptibility. A respiratory infection which causes inflammation of the lungs and interferes with the normal breathing process is particularly prone to the development of complications.

Accidents, although not one of the five leading causes of death, represented a sizable number of deaths of persons over the age of 75. The accidental death rate for persons over the age of 75 (1.168 per 1000) was actually higher than for any other age group. The leading cause of accidental death for this age group was falls (.433 per 1000); followed by motor vehicles (.257 per 1000); suffocation (.105 per 1000) and medicosurgical incidents (.068 per 1000). Infants and persons over the age of 75 had the highest accidental death rates due to fire and flame (.046 per 1000).

The suicide rate (.453 per 1000) for persons over the age of 65 was higher than for any other age group. While the high suicide rate during younger age groups can be attributed to difficulties in handling the demands of living, the suicide rate among the elderly population can be attributed to difficulties in adjusting to the changes in lifestyle which frequently accompany growing older. Declining physical health, loss of a spouse, forced retirement, the sale of the family residence, social isolation and economic concerns are a few of the life events which can contribute to a high incidence of stress and depression among this older group. Florida has a large retirement community which has moved to Florida and away from family and friends. Without these supports, which are based on a lifetime of experiences, it becomes even more difficult to cope with these changes. To a certain extent, Floridians who continue to reside in the state but whose children have migrated elsewhere have the same frustrations. In 1985, there were 20 counties which had a greater proportion of their citizens over the age of 65 than the statewide proportion. Fifteen of these counties had suicide rates which were equal to or greater than the state rate of .163 per 1000. Counties with the highest percentages of persons over the age of 65 were Charlotte (36.5%), Pasco (34.3%), Sarasota (31.8%), Hernando (31.4%), Citrus (31.2%), Lake (28.9%) and Pinellas (28.6%). Of these counties, only Sarasota and Highlands had suicide rates slightly below the state rate. Sarasota had a rate of .158 per 1000 and Highlands had a rate of .153 per 1000.

Of major concern to the elderly are disorders (dementiae) which cause the loss of mental functions in an otherwise alert and awake individual. Perhaps the most widely recognized of these disorders is Alzheimer's Disease, a progressive form of dementia that may last as long as 20 years prior to death. At present it is incurable and irreversible. Although the disease strikes persons in their 40's, the older person is more likely to encounter Alzheimer's. It affects 5-15 percent of persons 60-80 years of age, 20 percent of persons over the age of 80, and 25 percent of the population over the age of 85. Despite the fact that Alzheimer's is associated with aging, it is not part of the "normal" aging process. It strikes without regard to sex, race, socioeconomic status or occupation. Florida has implemented an Alzheimer's Initiative which consists of four major components: a statewide advisory committee; memory disorder clinics; day care centers; and, respite care programs. In addition, the University of Florida and Mount Sinai Medical Center in Miami have jointly contracted with HRS to develop and implement a research oriented Alzheimer's Disease Brain Bank to augment ongoing research efforts. The University of South Florida is developing an Alzheimer's Disease Registry and Information System.

The report of the Florida Committee on Aging showed that most elderly persons are in good physical and mental health, have adequate economic resources, remain as intellectually alert as younger persons, and express considerable satisfaction with their daily lives. In Florida, 80 percent of all older persons live in their own homes and only about two percent of Florida's population over the age of 65 reside in nursing homes. In mid-1987, Florida had 486 nursing homes with 55,143 beds and an occupancy rate of 89 percent.

The Florida Hospital Cost Containment Board completed a nursing home patient survey for 1985 which provided a demographic profile of nursing home patients. The majority (78.07%) of nursing home patients were over the age of 75. Persons between the ages of 65-74 comprised only 14.57 percent of the nursing home population. The most frequent diagnosis for persons over the age of 75 was Organic Brain Syndrome (Alzheimer's) followed by cerebrovascular accidents and fractures. Approximately 56 percent of all patients had diagnoses linked to diseases of aging. A large number of Florida's nursing home patients are supported by public funds, primarily through the Medicaid program. Although Medicaid paid for 57.83 percent of all patient days in 1985, the elderly and or members of their family paid for over 34 percent of the patient days. The majority (61%) of admissions were from hospitals following an episode of acute illness. Over 22 percent of the patients surveyed were admitted from home.

According to the 1979 National Health Interview Survey which was conducted by the National Center for Health Statistics, 43.65 percent of those 85 years of age and older need the assistance of another in one or more activities in order to remain in their home. Of those 60-64 years of age, 5.5 percent need assistance; of those 65-74 years of age, 6.99 percent need assistance; and, of those 75-84 years of age, 16.03 percent need assistance. Florida has made available an increasing number of community based programs and services which contribute to the self-sufficiency of persons over the age of 65. The Community Care for the Elderly (CCE) Program provides for a variety of home delivered, day care, and other basic services. At a minimum there are at least three core services in each HRS district. These services include homemaker and chore services, respite care, adult day care, medical transportation, mini day care, home delivered meals, health maintenance services, emergency alert/response, home health aide, home nursing, personal care, and medical and therapeutic care. The program relies heavily on volunteers to provide both administrative and service delivery assistance. During the 1985-86 fiscal year, the CCE program provided services to 26,145 persons. The majority (67%) of these clients were over the age of 75. The most widely used, and most widely available, services were homemaker and personal care. The Home Care for the Elderly Program provides a basic support and maintenance payment to eligible clients at risk of institutionalization. The subsidy is provided to assist with the costs of housing, food, clothing, incidentals and medical, pharmaceutical, and dental services not covered by insurance. The average stipend is $107.00 per month with an additional $81.00 for the supplement. Additional long term care services and other alternatives to nursing home care are discussed in the Health Facilities section.

Health Manpower

Physicians include medical doctors, osteopaths, chiropractors, and podiatrists. All physicians diagnose and treat human diseases and abnormal physical conditions, but each discipline uses a somewhat different approach.

Medical doctors practice allopathic medicine and are licensed under the provisions of Chapter 458, Florida Statutes. Allopathic medicine makes use of all measures proven effective in the treatment of disease. Licensing may be by examination, endorsement, temporary certificate for areas of critical need, or by a public health certificate to work at county public health units. Medical doctors must be graduated from an approved medical school and have completed one year of internship prior to examination for licensure. Limited licenses are available for retired medical doctors who may then practice only in the employ of public agencies or non-profit agencies located in areas of critical medical need.

Osteopathic medicine is similar to allopathic medicine except that its practice is based in part upon educational standards and requirements which emphasize the importance of the musculoskeletal structure and manipulative therapy in the maintenance and restoration of health. Osteopathic physicians in Florida comprise about six percent of Florida active physician supply as compared to four percent in the United States as a whole. Florida now has a college of osteopathy, Southeastern College of Osteopathic Medicine in North Miami Beach. Osteopaths are licensed under Chapter 459, Florida Statutes.

Chiropractors are licensed under Chapter 460, Florida Statutes. To be eligible for license examination, candidates must have a bachelor's degree and have earned a doctorate in chiropractic medicine from one of nine accredited colleges. Spinal manipulation or adjustment is the usual and customary treatment procedure in chiropractic medicine. Chiropractic physicians primarily treat musculoskeletal disorders, but may treat organic or visceral disorders, based on the premise that correction of spinal defects may improve function in other areas due to the spine's dominant position in the nervous system. Chiropractors may now use physical therapy and acupuncture, administer vitamins, render nutritional advice and administer proprietary drugs and injectable vitamins upon certification for each of these procedures.

Podiatric physicians provide the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of abnormal conditions of the feet. Podiatrists perform surgical procedures on the foot, prescribe corrective devices, and prescribe and administer drugs and physical therapy. They deliver a wide range of services, including the medical and surgical treatment of corns, callouses, bunions, bursitis, flatfeet, diseases of the skin and nails, and foot injuries affecting bones, tendons, muscles, and joints. Podiatrists also serve as an entry point into the health care system for patients with systemic diseases which are manifest through symptoms in the feet. These patients are referred to other physicians for treatment of the underlying illness. Podiatric physicians are licensed under Chapter 461, Florida Statutes. In order to be licensed, candidates must have received their professional education at one of the colleges of podiatric medicine accredited by the Council on Podiatry Education of the American Podiatric Medical Association. Most students enter colleges of podiatric medicine after completion of a bachelor's degree. The podiatry curriculum involves four years of study, after which most graduates engage in podiatric residency training programs for one or more years.

Physician's assistants are certified under Chapter 458.347, Florida Statutes. Licensed physicians may apply to the Department of Professional Regulation to supervise a physician's assistant who has graduated from an approved program. Physician's assistants enable medical doctors and osteopaths to delegate health care tasks when such delegation is consistent with the patient's health and welfare. The University of Florida is the only school in the state currently offering a program. Students may begin the course of study after 64 hours of undergraduate preparation, although one-third have bachelor's degrees when they enroll. Graduates receive a bachelor's degree in Health Science at the end of two years.

Nurses are licensed under Chapter 464, Florida Statutes, and are of three classes: (1) advanced registered nurse practitioners (2) registered nurses and (3) practical nurses. Advanced registered nurse practitioners perform all the duties of a registered nurse and advanced level nursing approved by the Board of Nursing. Within the context of advanced or specialized nursing practice, the advanced registered nurse practitioner may perform nursing diagnosis and nursing treatment of alterations of the health status. The advanced registered nurse practitioner may also perform acts of medical diagnosis and treatment, prescription and operation which are identified and approved by a professional committee.

Registered nurses are expected to perform those acts requiring substantial specialized knowledge, judgement, and nursing skill based upon applied principles of psychological, biological, physical, and social sciences.

Practical nurses are expected to perform services including the administration of treatments and medications in the care of the ill, injured, or infirm and the maintenance of health and prevention of illness of others, under the direction of a registered nurse, or a licensed medical doctor, osteopathic physician, podiatrist, or dentist.

Certified nurse midwives are licensed registered nurses who have received advanced training at a university affiliated nurse midwifery education program. Nurse midwives care for essentially low-risk women during pregnancy, labor, and birth. Care is also extended to the new-born baby and mother following birth. Nurse midwives always work in a team relationship with physicians and other health professionals so that medical consultation or assistance is available should it be required. The University of Florida and the University of Miami each offer a master's level nurse midwifery educational program.

Lay midwives are licensed under Chapter 467, Florida Statutes. This law applies only to lay midwives with a valid license on October 1, 1984, or persons who were enrolled in one of Florida's two approved schools for lay midwives on that date. Lay midwives accept only those clients who are low-risk, and who have had a complete history, physical, and risk assessment by a physician. Lay midwives usually deliver babies in the client's home or at a birth center.

Optometrists are licensed under Chapter 463, Florida Statutes. The practice of optometry includes the diagnosis of the human eye and its appendages; the determination of the refractive powers of the human eyes, or any visual, muscular, neurological, or anatomic anomalies of the human eyes; and the prescribing and employment of lenses, contact lenses, and any other means or methods for the correction, remedy, or relief of any insufficiencies or abnormal conditions of the human eyes. Specially certified optometrists may administer and prescribe topical ocular pharmaceutical agents to their patients. The exact list of permitted pharmaceuticals is established by rule by the Department of Professional Regulation.

Psychologists are licensed under Chapter 490, Florida Statutes. An applicant must have a doctorate in psychology from a program approved by the American Psychological Association and two years of full-time, supervised experience in the field of psychology.

Pharmacists are licensed under Chapter 465, Florida Statutes. The practice of pharmacy includes compounding; dispensing; and consultation concerning contents, therapeutic values, and uses of any medicinal drug. It also includes consultation concerning therapeutic values and interactions of over-the-counter preparations. Under the 1986 Florida self-care pharmacy regulations, pharmacists may consult with patients and dispense about thirty drugs previously available only by a physician's prescription. Florida A & M University and the University of Florida each offer a bachelor's degree (five year program) and a doctorate in pharmacy (six year program). The current active supply of pharmacists in the state at 6.4 per 10,000 population is very close to the national average of 6.6.

Physical therapists are licensed under Chapter 486, Florida Statutes. Physical therapy includes treatment and prevention of disability, injury, or disease and related rehabilitation by the use of the physical, chemical, and other properties of air, cold, heat, electricity, exercise, and massage. Other agents which may be used in therapy are radiant energy, ultrasound, and water. Florida A & M University, Florida International University, and the University of Florida offer bachelor's degrees in physical therapy. The typical student begins his course of study after completing 64 college credits at the undergraduate level. The University of Miami and the University of Florida each offer a master's degree program.

Occupational therapists are licensed under Chapter 468.201, Florida Statutes. Occupational therapy is the evaluation and treatment of individuals whose ability to cope with the tasks of living is threatened or impaired by developmental deficits, the aging process, poverty and cultural differences, physical injury or illness, or psychological and social disability. The treatment utilizes task-oriented activities to prevent or correct physical or emotional deficits or to minimize the disabling effect of these deficits in the life of the individual. Florida International University and the University of Florida offer bachelor's degrees in occupational therapy.

Respiratory therapists are licensed under Chapter 468, Florida Statutes. They provide the following respiratory care services to patients with deficiencies and abnormalities associated with the cardiopulmonary system: use of medical gases, gas administration apparatus, humidification, environmental control systems and aerosols; ventilatory support and management of life support systems; bronchopulmonary drainage and breathing exercises; respiratory rehabilitation; administration of drugs and medicines to the cardiopulmonary system; maintenance of natural and artificial airways; assistance with cardiopulmonary resuscitation; and specific testing techniques related to the cardiopulmonary system.

Clinical laboratory personnel, licensed under Chapter 483, Florida Statutes, include four levels (1) clinical laboratory director, (2) clinical laboratory supervisor, (3) medical technologist, and (4) medical technician. Medical technologists perform laboratory tests for the detection, diagnosis, and treatment of disease. These tests are performed in conjunction with pathologists and other physicians or scientists who specialize in clinical chemistry, microbiology, or the other biological sciences. Medical technologists develop data on the blood, tissues, and fluids in the human body by using a variety of precision instruments. They perform complex analyses, fine line discrimination and correction of errors. They are able to recognize interdependency of tests and have knowledge of physiological conditions affecting test results in order to confirm these results and to develop data which may be used by a physician in determining the presence, extent, and possible causes of disease. Medical technicians perform routine, uncomplicated procedures in the areas of hematology, serology, blood banking, urinalysis, microbiology, and clinical chemistry. These procedures involve the use of common laboratory instruments in processes where discrimination is clear, errors are few and easily corrected, and results of the procedures can be confirmed with a reference test or source within the working area.

Radiologic technologists are certified by the Department of Health & Rehabilitative Services under Chapter 468, Florida Statutes. They are qualified to use X-rays on human beings under the specific direction of a licensed practitioner. Prior to examination, applicants for certification must have successfully completed a 24-month course of study in radiologic technology in a school approved by the Department of Health & Rehabilitative Services or completed a course of study provided to the applicant by the Department. In certain cases certification without examination is acceptable.

Two types of emergency medical personnel are certified by the Department of Health & Rehabilitative Services under Chapter 401, Florida Statutes: emergency medical technicians (EMT) and paramedics. An EMT must be certified in cardiopulmonary resuscitation, must complete an approved training course, and pass a state proficiency examination. An EMT can perform first-aid techniques considered to be non-invasive such as the application of splints. A paramedic is required to have served at least a year as an EMT, completed a training course accredited by the American Medical Association, and passed a state proficiency examination. Under the supervision of a physician a paramedic may use life-saving techniques such as intubation to administer drugs and intravenous fluids and cardiac defibrillation.

Dentists and dental hygienists are licensed under Chapter 466, Florida Statutes. Dentists examine, diagnose, and treat conditions within the human oral cavity and its adjacent tissues and structures. Acting under the supervision of a dentist, dental hygienists may remove calculus, perform root planing and curettage, expose X-rays, and apply topical agents to teeth.

The tables on pages 22 and 23 display the number of licensed practitioners in each manpower category. The tables include all individuals with active licenses and Florida mailing addresses. All of these professionals, however, may not be in active practice in Florida. The supply of medical doctors and osteopathic physicians in Florida is divided among four groups: (1) actively practicing physicians, (2) faculty, (3) interns, residents, and fellows, and (4) federal and state employees. Only the first group is normally available to serve the general public. The statistics presented on pages 22-25 refer to that group, which numbered approximately 19,400 at the end of 1986.

Physicians by Specialty

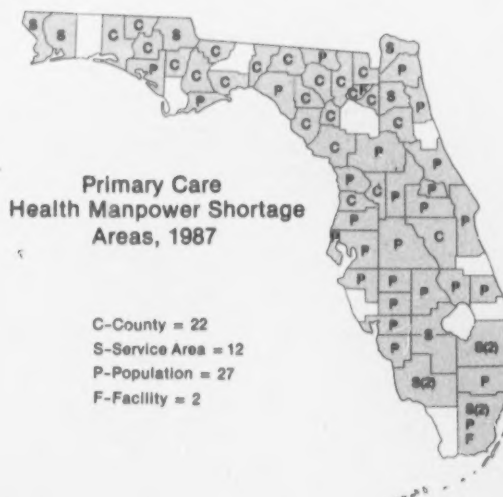

The geographic and specialty distribution of actively practicing medical doctors and osteopaths in Florida at the end of 1986 is displayed in the tables on pages 24 and 25. With respect to the specialties: psychiatry includes general and childhood practice; radiology includes both therapeutic and diagnostic practice; and surgery includes general, neurological, orthopedic, plastic, thoracic/cardiovascular and all other surgical specialties except urology. The "all other specialties" category includes general preventive medicine, geriatrics, infectious disease, neonatal and perinatal medicine, physical medicine, rehabilitative medicine, aerospace medicine, public health and all other specialties not identified elsewhere. The most numerous specialties are family/general practice, surgery, internal medicine, and radiology.

The term "primary care" refers to those medical specialties which are involved most directly with patient care and cure. These physicians are usually the first to encounter patients suffering from acute illnesses or injury. The availability of these practitioners is, therefore, critical to a community's immediate health needs. Primary care generally includes emergency medicine, family/general practice, internal medicine, gynecology and obstetrics/gynecology, and pediatrics. The Graduate Medical Education National Advisory Committee has recommended that at least 43 percent of an area's physician workforce should be primary care specialists. Another accepted standard (cf. Review of Health Manpower Population Requirements Standards, USDHHS, 1976) is that there be 79.1 primary care physicians per 100,000 population. Primary care specialists represent approximately 43 percent of the Florida physician workforce but show a statewide per capita rate of only 72 per 100,000 population.

Health Manpower Shortage Areas

In order to ameliorate the problem of physician shortages, health manpower shortage areas (HMSA) have been established by the federal government for primary care physicians. Areas are designated based on a formula which considers total population, low-income groups, poverty rates, and the number of primary care physicians available to serve a defined population. In general the desired ratio is one primary care physician per 3,500 persons. Once an area has been designated as an HMSA, it is eligible to receive a National Health Service Corps assignee. An entire county can qualify by having too few physicians to meet the needs of its population. A combination of counties or a geographic portion of a single county may have a physician shortage and may be designated as a service area. A county may have an identified subpopulation of medically needy persons; thus this population may be eligible for designation. Finally, a facility within a county, such as a prison or hospital, can become eligible based upon inadequate staffing.

Health Care Facilities

Florida has an extensive array of health facilities and services which can be divided into three major areas: medical treatment and support, long term care and mental health. Tables on the following pages provide summary data on the number of facilities located in each district and county and their capacity.

Medical Treatment and Support

Abortion Clinics: Abortion clinics are authorized to perform abortions before the third trimester and to provide counselling services to clients. They are licensed under the auspices of Chapter 390, Florida Statutes.

Ambulatory Care Centers: These facilities, which include walk in emergency centers and ambulatory care clinics, function as one stop care centers for patients with common health care problems who need immediate attention. Using on-site laboratory and X-ray facilities, these centers provide prompt evaluation and diagnosis of the patient's condition. Minor illnesses and injuries are treated on site while severe cases are referred to hospitals or other specialists after stabilization. Most centers operate 12-16 hours every day. Florida does not regulate ambulatory care centers.

Ambulatory Surgical Centers: These freestanding centers, licensed under Chapter 395, Florida Statutes, provide a less expensive alternative for patients who require minor surgery. Many gynecologic, urologic, orthopedic and other minor surgical procedures may be performed in these facilities on an outpatient basis.

Birthing Centers: Birthing centers licensed under Chapter 383, Florida Statutes, provide an alternative to hospital delivery for low-risk pregnant women and their families who wish to experience natural childbirth in a home-like setting. They encourage familial bonding while providing extra precautions not available in the home, including immediate transfer to a hospital in an emergency. The centers offer prenatal and postnatal care, labor and delivery services and counselling provided by nurse midwives, nurse practitioners and registered nurses under the supervision of a family practice physician with consultation from an obstetrician.

Blood Banks: Blood banks collect, process and store blood and blood products for use in surgical operations, blood replacement in accidents and treatment of individuals with conditions requiring blood transfusions. These facilities also collect and distribute blood in cases of emergencies and natural disasters. Some blood banks allow individuals to donate blood which is stored for their own use during planned surgery or for use by a specific individual or group. Florida's blood banks include freestanding community blood banks, American Red Cross facilities and blood banks within hospitals.

Clinical Laboratories: HRS branch laboratories, clinical laboratories within health care facilities and independent freestanding clinical laboratories perform examinations on materials and specimens taken from the human body to provide information needed for use in the diagnosis, prevention or treatment of disease or the assessment of a medical condition. Clinical laboratories are licensed under Chapter 483, Part I, Florida Statutes.

County Health Units: County public health units are funded jointly by the state and counties to prevent the occurrence of disease and promote healthy lifestyles. This includes protection of the public from environmental hazards, control of infectious diseases, health screening and evaluation services for early detection of disease, health education and counselling services, and diagnosis and treatment when necessary. Each county is required by Chapter 154, Florida Statutes, to provide a basic program of public health services including environmental health inspections, sanitary nuisance investigations, communicable and chronic disease control, epidemiological investigations, control of tuberculosis and sexually transmissible diseases, and immunizations.

Diagnostic Centers: Freestanding diagnostic centers are a new addition to Florida's health system. They provide specialized diagnostic and sophisticated radiological services such as computed tomography scans and magnetic resonance imaging on an outpatient basis.

Dialysis Centers: Freestanding and hospital dialysis centers offer maintenance dialysis and training in home dialysis to individuals suffering from end stage renal disease (kidney failure) who must undergo hemodialysis or peritoneal dialysis. Both procedures require the use of an artificial kidney machine every 2-3 days to cleanse the blood of impurities which would normally be removed by the kidneys. Some centers also provide back-up dialysis and dialysis supplies to patients using continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis (CAPD) or continuous cycling peritoneal dialysis (CCPD). With these procedures, the patient dialyzes himself using a special saline solution introduced through a catheter into the abdomen to absorb toxins from the blood, then drained from the body for cleansing.

Health Maintenance Organizations (HMO): These prepaid health plans provide comprehensive medical services to enrolled members for a fixed annual capitation fee. HMOs are required by Chapter 641, Part II, Florida Statutes, to provide certain minimum services: preventive health care, ambulatory diagnostic and treatment services, inpatient hospital care, inpatient and outpatient physician services, and emergency care. To become federally qualified, HMOs must also provide short-term mental health services, medical treatment and referral services for drug abuse and home health services. HMOs may provide pharmacies, dental offices and optometric services. Services are provided either directly through HMO clinics or by other licensed health care professionals who are under contract to the HMO.

Hospitals: Hospitals offer a broad range of health care services to both inpatients and outpatients. General acute care hospital services include medical and surgical services, obstetrics, pediatrics, intensive care, and emergency treatment. Psychiatric services include both long and short term treatment for mental health and substance abuse problems. Comprehensive medical rehabilitation services include intensive care and therapy to rehabilitate patients with severe physical disabilities. Hospitals may also offer a variety of other services including blood banks, dialysis treatment, home health services, long term nursing care, outpatient surgery, birthing centers, health education and risk prevention programs. Florida hospitals are licensed under the provisions of Chapter 395, Florida Statutes.

Multiphasic Health Testing Centers: Fixed and mobile multiphasic health testing centers licensed under Chapter 483, Part II, Florida Statutes, take specimens from patients for delivery to clinical laboratories and provide basic health testing such as electrocardiograms, audio and visual tests and blood pressure determinations.

Pharmacies: Community pharmacies dispense drugs and medications on an outpatient basis for treatment of chronic or episodic conditions. Under Florida's self-care pharmacy regulations, registered pharmacists may now consult directly with patients and dispense about 30 drugs previously available only with a physician's prescription. Health care facilities' institutional pharmacies dispense drugs to inpatients. Pharmacies are licensed under Chapter 465, Florida Statutes.

Primary Health Care Centers: Primary care centers include community and migrant farmworkers' health centers established by the federal government to improve access to health care for medically underserved populations. The centers provide the poor with a wide range of ambulatory health care services including medical diagnosis and treatment, dental care, psychiatric counselling and substance abuse treatment. Services are provided at no charge to individuals with incomes below federal poverty levels with fees based on a sliding scale for individuals with incomes above the poverty line.

Voluntary Health Agencies: Voluntary health agencies provide specialized services to individuals suffering from chronic diseases, congenital defects and disabilities, e.g. arthritis, birth defects, cancer, cerebral palsy, diabetes, epilepsy, heart disease, kidney disease, leukemia, multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, sickle cell anemia, tuberculosis and other diseases. These organizations generally provide professional and community education, risk prevention programs, patient and family counselling and education, and support for medical research. Some agencies provide or fund direct patient care, therapy and rehabilitation programs, transportation to providers, and medical supplies.

Long Term Care

Long term care facilities provide a wide spectrum of specialized health, social and residential care services to individuals who require continual assistance as a result of chronic physical or mental impairments and others undergoing an extended recuperation from a major illness or injury. Among the patients served by long term care facilities are individuals over age 65, patients with developmental disabilities and the terminally ill.

Adult Congregate Living Facilities (ACLF): ACLFs are licensed under Chapter 400, Part II, Florida Statutes to provide 24-hour personal care services to the impaired elderly and disabled low-income individuals who are eligible for Supplemental Security Income and Optional State

Supplementation payments. Services may include assistance with bathing, eating, personal hygiene, housekeeping and ambulation as well as personal supervision, emotional security, supervision of self-administered drugs, and assistance in obtaining health care services. The facilities may also provide limited nursing services when specifically licensed to do so.

Adult Day Care Centers: These centers are licensed under Chapter 400, Part IV, Florida Statutes, to provide a protective setting, social and leisure activities, nutritional services, and self-care training to elderly or impaired individuals who need services on less than a full-time basis. Some centers may also provide speech and physical therapy services or health services such as assessment, counselling, treatment and referrals.

Adult Foster Homes: These facilities provide supervised home living environments as an alternative to institutionalization or to assist those returning from an institutional setting. They are licensed under the provisions of Chapter 10A-14, Florida Administrative Code, to provide similar services to the same client groups as ACLFs, but cannot exceed a capacity of three.

Home Health Agencies: Home health agencies are licensed under Chapter 400, Part III, Florida Statutes, to provide skilled nursing and rehabilitative services to home-bound patients with chronic or temporarily debilitating conditions and individuals recovering from major medical treatment in their own homes. Services include health care by registered or licensed practical nurses, personal care by home health aides, nutritional consultation, medical social services, and therapeutic services such as occupational, physical and speech therapy. Agencies may provide medical supplies and durable medical equipment and administer drugs and medications prescribed by a physician. Those which provide skilled nursing care and at least one rehabilitative service may be certified for participation in the Medicare program upon approval of a certificate of need from the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

Homes for Special Services: Similar to nursing homes, these facilities provide specialized health care services, including personal and custodial care, but do not provide continuous nursing services to residents. They are licensed under Chapter 400, Part II, Florida Statutes.

Hospices: Hospice programs provide an alternative to inpatient hospitalization for terminally ill patients and their families. They provide a continuum of home, outpatient and homelike inpatient care designed to meet the special needs of the dying. Services include the control of pain, nausea, vomiting and other symptoms as effectively as medically possible; emotional and spiritual support for the family; and follow-up services to the family during bereavement. Hospices, which are licensed under Chapter 400, Part V, Florida Statutes, may be organized as freestanding facilities or as autonomous units within either a hospital or a home health agency.

Intermediate Care Facilities for the Mentally Retarded (ICF/MR): Facilities are licensed under Chapter 393, Florida Statutes, to provide an alternative to institutionalization for severely or profoundly retarded patients and retarded individuals with multiple handicaps who are eligible for Medicaid. They furnish a homelike residential setting that provides the atmosphere, training and support necessary to stimulate behavioral change and allow the individual to function at the greatest possible level of independence. ICF/MRs provide room and board; medical, pharmacy, nursing, nutritional and dental services; direct care supervision; and training in self care, daily living and socialization. Additional services may include physical, occupational, speech and music therapy and social work services.

Nursing Homes: These facilities are licensed under Chapter 400, Part I, Florida Statutes, to provide residential health and medical care services to patients requiring nursing care including the following minimum services: 24-hour nursing care, personal care or custodial care as needed; both routine and emergency physician services; and access to dental, other health-related, recreational, rehabilitative and social work services. Nursing homes are also required to assist residents in obtaining other services if they do not provide them directly: pharmacy; laboratory; X-ray; dental, hearing and vision care; diet, occupational, physical and speech therapy; mental health counselling, social services and medical services. Community nursing homes are open to all while sheltered nursing homes located within continuing care communities licensed under Chapter 651, Florida Statutes are restricted to residents on a contractual basis.

Mental Health

Adult Residential Treatment Systems (ARTS): An ARTS program serves individuals aged 18 to 54 who have either been discharged from or are at risk of being admitted to a state mental health treatment facility. A complete ARTS is composed of a 20-bed extended stay group home, a 15-bed group home, 32 supervised apartment beds, 16 satellite apartment beds, an 80-member intensive day care, a 100-member social club, two 15-member social networks and a case management team. The residential components are licensed mental health residential treatment facilities which provide a continuum of staff supervision, support and assistance according to each client's level of self-sufficiency. The intensive day program provides personal, social and vocational skills training to participants.

Geriatric Residential Treatment Systems (GRTS): A GRTS program serves persons 55 and over who are afflicted with a chronic mental illness who have been either discharged from or are at risk of being admitted to a state mental health treatment facility. A complete GRTS program is composed of an extended group home, a professional group home, an intermediate group home, two supervised group homes, two groups of satellite apartments, 68 intensive day treatment slots and a case management component. The total residential capacity is 103-108 individuals. The residential components are licensed mental health treatment facilities which provide a continuum of medical services and treatment, staff supervision, support and assistance according to each resident's physical, mental and social capabilities. The intensive day program provides psychological treatment services and both personal and social skills training. Residential components of ARTS and GRTS programs are licensed under Chapter 394, Part IV, Florida Statutes, based on the degree of services provided.

Community Mental Health Facilities: These facilities are designed to prevent mental illness and to diagnose, treat and support individuals suffering from these conditions. Services include diagnosis, evaluation, prevention programs, outpatient treatment, day treatment, crisis stabilization, counselling, hospital inpatient diagnosis and treatment, and residential treatment.

Substance Abuse Treatment Facilities: Substance abuse facilities provide either residential or outpatient diagnostic and treatment services to individuals suffering from a chemical dependency such as alcoholism or drug addiction. Substance abuse services include detoxification, individual and group therapy, counselling and education services. Drug abuse programs are licensed under Chapter 397, Florida Statutes.

Approximately 3000 health care facilities included in the following list are displayed on individual county maps and detail maps of highly urbanized counties and areas with large concentrations of medical facilities. Facilities are grouped in three major categories, each of which is divided into two subcategories which are identified on the maps by different symbols:

Hospital Beds and Services

The following pages contain data on beds, equipment and services available in Florida hospitals. Data from the American Hospital Association on page 32 show a continual increase in Florida's hospital bed supply since 1960 although beds in long term psychiatric facilities have been declining due to deinstitutionalization.

Hospital Type	Number	Beds
Acute Care General Medical/Surgical	231	55,727
Psychiatric (State)	8	5,967
Psychiatric (Other)	35	2,778
Rehabilitation	9	568
Military	8	774
Veterans' Administration	5	3,434
Special Children's (Pediatric)	3	373
Special Children's (Rehabilitative)	2	160
Prison	1	153
Tuberculosis	1	100
Eye	1	100
General Restricted to Care of Retarded	2	57
General Converted to Long Term Care Use	2	231

These categories are descriptive, not formal licensure categories. The total number of beds within a facility may be divided into a number of categories: acute care, long term psychiatric, short term psychiatric, long term substance abuse, short term substance abuse, rehabilitation and extended care. Acute care beds may also be further divided within the hospital into medical/surgical, obstetrical, pediatric and intensive care beds. Rural hospitals with less than 50 beds may also designate a number of beds as swing beds, which may be used either for acute care or for extended care depending upon need.

Specialized Hospital Equipment and Services

Medical technology has rapidly evolved within the past 15 years. These technological advances have provided substantial benefits to patients, especially in the areas of cancer and heart disease, both in diagnosis and treatment. Specialized medical equipment can be categorized as diagnostic or therapeutic. For many years, non-invasive diagnostic imaging was limited to the X-ray machine and the fluoroscope. In recent years, digital vascular imaging (DVI) systems have expanded the capability of traditional X-ray equipment by adding computer and video technology. DVI systems take several X-rays simultaneously, then display a computer generated composite image for analysis. The images are then recorded on video discs. DVI systems are primarily intended for the diagnosis of vascular diseases.

In the 1970s, computerized tomography (CT) scanners were introduced. CT scanners were originally designed to diagnose neurological disorders associated with the brain such as tumors and strokes. These CT head scanners have now been largely replaced with improved units which allow scanning of the entire body. The devices take a large number of X-ray images at a variety of angles around the body and compile them in a computer which then produces an enhanced image of a specific cross section on a cathode ray tube (CRT) for interpretation. CT scans may be performed as a totally non-invasive procedure or after the injection of a dye to improve the clarity of the images, e.g. a scan "with contrast". CT scanners are 10-25 times more sensitive than conventional X-ray machines and can differentiate between hard and soft tissues, body fluids and water. CT scans thus can replace other invasive diagnostic procedures. In practice, CT scanning is the primary imaging procedure for diseases of the central nervous system; the system upon which neurologists and neurosurgeons rely for diagnosis.

The newest development in diagnostic imagery is magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). MRI scanning differs from other radiologic equipment in that no radiation is used in the procedure. MRI scanners use a large magnet which surrounds the patient. Radio waves are passed through the magnetic field, producing an image by the way that the radio waves reflect off of the patient's tissues. Computer generated images are presented to the viewer for analysis. MRI scanners are used to detect malignancies since cancerous tissue reacts differently to the radio waves. They are also useful in the diagnosis of patients with multiple sclerosis, cerebrovascular disease, heart disease and complications during pregnancy.

Specialized therapeutic equipment includes devices for treatment of cancer and kidney stones. Radiation therapy equipment is used in the treatment of cancer and other tumors or neoplasms with ionizing radiation. Radiation is often used prior to surgery to reduce tumor size and after surgery to kill remaining cells. Chemotherapy (drug treatment) is often used to increase the susceptibility of cancer cells prior to radiation treatment and afterwards to limit the growth of malignant cells. About half of all cancer patients require radiation therapy at some time. The most common type of radiation therapy is external irradiation. Megavoltage equipment, such as Cobalt 60 units, betatrons and linear accelerators, is used on most cancer patients. These units have an energy range of 2-50 megavolts and are used to treat deep tumors. Factors which limit the use of radiation therapy units include high equipment costs, special architectural requirements to prevent radiation leakage and high maintenance.

One of the newest developments in medical equipment is the extracorporeal shockwave lithotripter (ESWL). This device disintegrates certain types of kidney stones with ultrasonic waves. Patients are immersed in water, then bombarded with highly focused ultrasonic waves for 30-60 minutes to break up the stones into small pieces for elimination. A dual-screen X-ray imaging system is used to determine the exact location of the stone. Like radiation therapy units, lithotripters have high acquisition and maintenance costs, thus reducing the number of hospitals which can support them.

Specialized hospital services involve a number of highly sophisticated medical treatment options for the management of serious illnesses and conditions. These services require specialized equipment and highly trained personnel. Due to the limited number of patients requiring such services and the high costs of developing and maintaining quality programs, these services are usually offered only by larger metropolitan and teaching hospitals. Some of the major specialized services are open heart surgery, cardiac catheterization, organ transplantation, and burn units.

Open heart surgery is the general term used for those specialized cardiac surgical procedures which require the use of a cardiopulmonary bypass machine to perform the functions of the patient's heart and lungs during surgery. This is one of the most complicated types of surgery and is used to treat conditions such as congenital heart defects, heart disease and coronary artery disease. Coronary bypass operations are the most common type of open heart surgery. Due to improvements in technology and techniques, there has been an increasing diffusion of open heart surgery in Florida with over 10,000 operations performed each year.

Cardiac catheterization services are specialized diagnostic procedures which involve the initial insertion of a long flexible tube, or catheter, into a peripheral blood vessel in a patient's arm or leg from whence it is manipulated into the heart. These procedures allow the physician to secure blood samples, determine intracardiac pressure and inject radiopaque substances into the heart and surrounding arteries for further examination by use of radiological equipment. The procedures present detailed information to the cardiac surgeon regarding problem areas in the patient's coronary system prior to surgery. Common studies which are performed in specially-equipped cardiac catheterization laboratories include angiocardiology and coronary arteriography. Cardiac catheterization is also used to implant pacemaker electrodes and insert devices to improve blood circulation. These services are often co-located with open heart surgery units.

Organ transplantation has become more feasible in recent years with improvements in surgical techniques, anesthesiology and anti-rejection drugs. Organs which now may be transplanted include corneas, eyes, kidneys, livers, hearts and lungs. Although cornea transplants are relatively routine, other transplant programs are located only at major community hospitals and teaching facilities. Florida currently has 36 cornea transplant facilities, three kidney transplant programs, five heart transplant programs and two liver transplant programs.

Specialized burn units are also limited to large community hospitals, teaching facilities and specialized burn hospitals such as those operated by the Shriners. These facilities require specialized environments for the treatment of second and third degree burns, which allow the patient to remain in a special germ-free environment. Florida has specialized burn units at four hospitals.

Maternal and infant care services are organized into three levels based upon the potential risk and/or condition of the expectant mother and the newborn infant. Level I services are those provided primarily for uncomplicated maternity and newborn patients. Such services may be performed in small community hospitals and freestanding birthing centers. Level II services provide a full range of maternal and neonatal services for both uncomplicated deliveries and for the majority of complicated obstetrical and certain neonatal illnesses. These services are usually available only in larger hospitals with organized obstetrical departments. Level III services provide care for the full range of obstetrical, fetal and neonatal illnesses and conditions, especially for the most serious types of conditions. These services are usually provided in large tertiary and teaching hospitals. The hospital services table shows hospitals with Level I obstetrical departments and Level II and III neonatal intensive care units.

District 1

District 1, comprising Escambia, Santa Rosa, Okaloosa, and Walton counties, is a predominantly rural area in the western end of the Florida panhandle. Within the district, east-west access is facilitated via Interstate 10. Pensacola is the only city in the district with more than 50,000 population. The economy of this region is based primarily on the military bases in Escambia and Okaloosa counties, although a retirement and recreation trade is growing along the coast. District 1 has a current population growth rate only slightly below that of the state average. The district's birth rate, at 14 percent above the state average, reflects the younger age distribution of this district's population. Okaloosa County, in particular, has the youngest age distribution of all counties in Florida. The district infant death rate is about 8 percent lower than the state average, while the age-adjusted death rate is approximately equal to the state rate. Socioeconomically, this district has a lower median family income and more families living in poverty than the state average. The percentage of blacks in the district's population is proportionately equivalent to the state's distribution, but the percentage of elderly is much lower than the state's distribution.

Among the District 1 counties, fairly high population growth rates are evident in Okaloosa and Walton counties, resulting from development along the coast and military increases at Eglin Air Force Base in Okaloosa County. High birth rates (for Florida) are found in Okaloosa and Santa Rosa counties. Although Walton County has a high proportion (9.1%) of births by mothers under 18 years, most of the other birth statistics are comparable to statewide rates.

For the period 1984-86, Santa Rosa and Walton had both high unemployment rates and high numbers of families living below the poverty line. In examining age and racial characteristics, only Walton appears to have a sizable elderly population while Escambia has the smallest proportion of blacks in the district's population.

In terms of health care resources, the district ratios for hospital beds and registered nurses are near the state averages. The number of nursing home beds per 10,000 population is predictably low given the small percentage of elderly in this district (10.0 percent for the district compared with 19.2 percent for the state). The number of physicians per 10,000 population is 22 percent less than the state average while the number of dentists per capita is 26 percent lower. To bring District 1 up to the state average, 55 additional dentists would be required. Military medical staff at Eglin Air Force Base partially augment the health manpower in Okaloosa County, but there is still an acute need for both physicians and dentists in Walton County. All of Walton County and parts of Escambia and Santa Rosa have been federally designated as primary care, health manpower shortage areas. Counties or subpopulations within counties may be eligible for such designation if they have fewer than one primary care physician for every 3500 persons. All of Walton and parts of Escambia and Okaloosa have similarly been designated as dental health manpower shortage areas.

District 2

District 2, which includes the 14 counties shown in the adjoining table, has the lowest population density, 56 people per square mile, of all HRS districts. There are only two cities, Tallahassee and Panama City, with over 30,000 people, and the district has very long driving distances between urban areas. District 2 currently has a population growth rate below the state average (2.9 percent compared with 3.2 percent). Its birth rate, about 5 percent above the state average, reflects its higher proportion of black residents (23.5 percent compared with 13.6 percent for the state) and more youthful age distribution. Among major health status indicators, the age-adjusted death rate is 8 percent higher and the infant death rate 7 percent higher than the state average. Because of these disconcerting health statistics, many District 2 counties would rank low on a quality of life scale. Franklin, Liberty, and Holmes counties have age-adjusted death rates in the highest decile in the state. Holmes and Washington have the highest age-adjusted, heart disease death rates in the state (51 percent above the state average). Liberty County has the highest accident death rate in the state, almost four times the state average during 1982-84. Jefferson County's infant death rate (21.3 deaths per 1000 live births) is the second highest in the state while Gadsden County's (19.4) is third highest. In this district, the proportion of all births attributed to mothers under 18 (7.1%) is well above the state average. Franklin, Gadsden, and Madison counties are overrepresented on this statistic.

Among socioeconomic indicators, District 2 has a median family income that is 10 percent below the state figure and a recent yearly unemployment rate (6.7%) that is 12 percent above the state average. Unemployment for the period 1984-86 exceeded 10 percent in Calhoun and Washington counties and was above 9 percent in Bay, Gulf, and Holmes. These counties are suffering economically from the effects of marginally profitable and highly cyclical industries such as fishing, timber, and farming.

District 3

District 3 is the largest HRS district in land area, but has a population density of only 81 people per square mile, which is one-third of the state average. Positive population growth rates that were characteristic only of South Florida are now common to District 3, where the population is now growing 4.1 percent yearly. Hernando County, with a growth rate equal to 7.8 percent per year, is the second fastest-growing county in the state. Citrus and Marion counties are also among Florida's ten fastest growing counties. The University of Florida's Bureau of Economic & Business Research has projected that the populations of Citrus and Marion counties will more than double between 1980 and 2000. Over the same period Hernando is projected to triple in population.

The health statistics for District 3 are somewhat unfavorable in comparison to the state. The age-adjusted death rate is higher by 7 percent, and the infant death rate is 9 percent higher. The district is 22 percent above the state average in the proportion of births to mothers under 18 years of age, with Dixie, Hamilton, and Sumter being most overrepresented.

Median family income is only 83 percent of the state figure, and unemployment is 10 percent higher. Unemployment and low incomes are probably caused by some of the same factors that affect District 2, i.e., highly cyclical and marginally profitable industries like farming and timber. Additionally, changes in agricultural patterns have left some District 3 rural areas with virtually no income base. The percent of families below the poverty line is significantly higher than state figures. District 3 nearly matches the state's age statistics but a greater number of elderly people are moving into the district.

Health care resources for District 3 are below the state averages on a per capita basis in all categories. Many of the physicians and dentists are concentrated in Gainesville, especially at the University of Florida Medical School, and may not be available to the rural counties.

District 4

District 4, located in the northeast section of Florida, includes Nassau, Baker, Duval, Clay, St. Johns, Flagler, and Volusia counties. Jacksonville in the north and Daytona Beach, approximately 90 miles to the south, are the two largest urbanized areas. Although joined by Interstate 95 there is relatively little interaction between the northern and southern population centers. Daytona Beach is more closely aligned with the Orlando market area than the Jacksonville area. Over the last three years District 4 has experienced a population growth rate exactly equal to the state rate, although the growth rate varies widely from county to county. The district contains three of the fastest growing counties in the state: Flagler, Clay, and St. Johns. The Palm Coast Development in Flagler and the Ponte Vedra Beach area in St. Johns have recently become popular spots for arriving retirees, fueling those counties' population growth. Clay County is now a convenient and growing "bedroom community" for the middle class employed in Jacksonville. The Bureau of Economic & Business Research projects that Clay County's population will more than double between 1980 and 2000. In the same span St. Johns will grow by 135 percent, and Flagler will almost double its population (191 percent increase).

Among the district's health statistics, only the age-adjusted death rate appears notable, at 113 percent of the state average. This difference is mainly due to the death rate in Duval County which has a higher rate because of its large black population. Higher black death rates result from the increased incidence of heart disease, stroke, accidents, and homicide in that population. The infant death rate is not unduly high in any of the district's counties; however, teenage pregnancy is common in District 4, particularly in Baker and Flagler counties. Flagler County has the added distinction of having the highest age-adjusted suicide rate in the state. This may be related to the recent surge of out-of-state retirees to Flagler. Research has shown that people uprooted and moved for whatever reasons tend to have higher suicide rates than settled populations.

The socioeconomic statistics of income and employment do not differ widely from state averages, but the district's demographic structure is younger than that of the state and includes a larger percentage of blacks. The elderly represent large portions of the populations in only Flagler and Volusia counties. Blacks are a major demographic factor only in Duval County.

The statistics for the district's health care resources are fairly close to state averages with only dentists per 10,000 people being noticeably low at 86 percent of the statewide averages. Baker is the only county that has been identified as a dental health manpower shortage area. Service areas or subpopulation groups within Clay, Duval, Nassau, St. Johns and Volusia have been declared primary care health manpower shortage areas. The affected portions of these counties contain about 108,000 persons who need an additional 14.7 primary care physicians in order to come up to federal standards. Clearly the health manpower shortage is not as severe a problem in District 4 as it is in Districts 2 and 3.

District 5

District 5, comprising Pasco and Pinellas counties, is the smallest HRS district, lying just west and north of Tampa Bay on Florida's west coast. The district once had a population growth rate well above the state average; however, with only 280 square miles of land and a limited water supply, Pinellas is nearing its "practical" growth limit. Pasco's growth rate has slowed in the last few years although it is still well above the state rate. The only rural area remaining in the district is in central Pasco county. The Bureau of Economic & Business Research expects Pasco to grow by 84 percent between 1980 and 2000. The birth rate in District 5 is low, reflecting the high proportion of elderly in the population. Other health statistics are in line with, or somewhat higher than, the state averages.

Economic statistics in District 5 are noteworthy for a low unemployment rate (80 percent of the state average) and a rather low median family income. The low family income results not from the general level of wages but rather from small family size (implying fewer wage earners per family) and the large proportion of elderly (who are not generally in the workforce). Income is relatively not as important to the elderly as is savings or assets which can be turned into cash.

In District 5 as a whole, all health care resources are near or above state per capita means. Licensed nursing homes and adult congregate living facilities, which serve elderly residents, are numerous. District 5 contains 16.3 percent of all the state's nursing home patients, significantly more than second-place District 11 with 12.3 percent. Nevertheless the District 5 occupancy rate at 90.2 is higher than the state average, 89.5 percent.

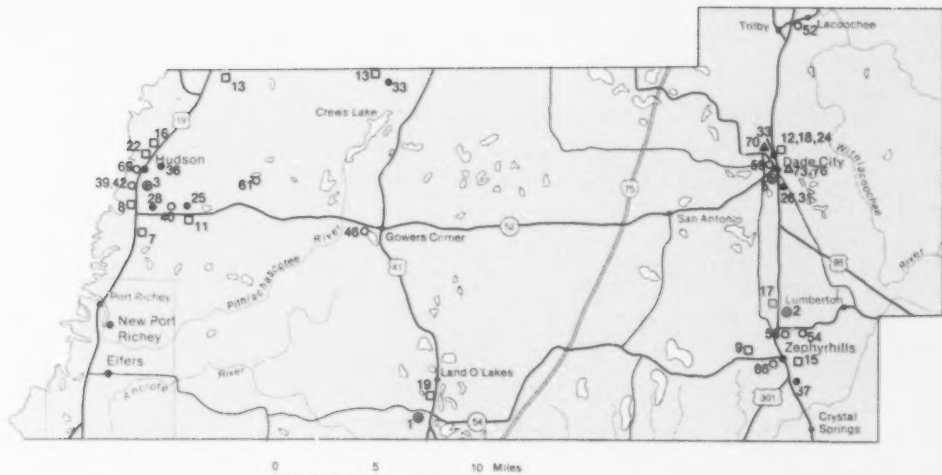

The poverty population of St. Petersburg, numbering about 20,000 people, has been declared a primary care health manpower shortage area and is in need of an additional 2.4 physicians. The Medicaid/migrant population of Pasco County, numbering about 12,000 people, is similarly designated and needs 3.4 additional primary care physicians.

In Pasco County both physicians and dentists per 10,000 population are well below state averages. At 10.4 physicians per 10,000 population, Pasco is about 146 physicians below the state standard. Similarly, the dental shortage is 45 full-time-equivalent dentists. Coincidentally, based upon state mean data, Pinellas has an implied surplus of 41 dentists. It is probable that some Pasco residents are receiving dental services in Pinellas and some Pinellas dentists have offices in Pasco. This underscores the necessity for researching and planning health care resources from a regional perspective rather than from only a city or county level.

District 6

District 6 in west central Florida comprises Hillsborough, Manatee, Polk, Highlands, and Hardee counties. The main urban areas are Tampa and Bradenton on the west edge of the district, and Lakeland and Winter Haven in Polk County. Much of the district is still rural (eastern Hillsborough and Manatee, southern Highlands and Polk, and most of Hardee). The largest counties in District 6, Hillsborough, Polk, and Manatee have already passed through their high population growth rate phases. Only Highlands County is currently experiencing rapid population growth due to the influx of retirees. Highlands County is projected by the Bureau of Economic & Business Research to grow by 76 percent between 1980 and 2000. The birth rates in District 6 exceed the state average, particularly in Hardee and Hillsborough. The health statistics in District 6 do not compare favorably with the state averages. The age-adjusted death rate is 107 percent of the state average; the infant death rate is 114 percent, and the incidence of low birthweight (under 2500 grams) births is 108 percent. Hillsborough's statistic for the percent of low birthweight babies is 113 percent of the state average—the highest figure for any large urban county.

In terms of the socioeconomic variables, the district median family income is near the state average, but Hardee and Highlands counties are far below the state average. Highlands' data can be explained by the large percentage of retired persons there, but Hardee's data results from chronic unemployment and low agricultural prices. The high unemployment rate in Polk is probably due to the loss of jobs in the phosphate industry and some job losses in citrus during the 1984 and 1985 freezes. The district as a whole has an unemployment rate equal to 118 percent of the state rate. High unemployment rates are often seen in conjunction with unfavorable health and social statistics.

District 6 health care resources are comparable to state statistics except for dentists, which are at only 73 percent of the state manpower ratio. Nearly 165 dentists would be needed to bring the district up to the state average. Hardee County is deficient in physicians as well as in dentists, needing 26 and 5.9 respectively to attain state norms.

Poverty populations, Medicaid eligible groups, and migrant farmworkers located in every county in District 6 have been designated by the federal government as primary care health manpower shortage populations. The net deficit for these groups is 26.5 primary care physicians. Polk County's poverty population, numbering some 50,000, is the most critically in need with a current requirement of 13.6 primary care physicians. All of Highlands and Hardee counties are dental manpower shortage areas, as are the poverty and migrant groups in Hillsborough/Manatee, and the Frostproof area of Polk. The total dental need in these four areas is 13.6 fulltime-equivalent dentists.

District 7

District 7 is a geographically diverse region which includes Brevard, Orange, Seminole, and Osceola counties in east-central Florida. Bisecting the district is the St. Johns River which passes through Seminole County and ends in southern Brevard. The main urban concentrations are along Interstate 4 in Seminole and Orange counties and in Brevard County along the western bank of the Indian River. Portions of Seminole, western Brevard, and southern Osceola still remain in a rural state. District 7 is currently undergoing a great population and economic expansion similar to, but much more soundly based than the "boom" of the 1920's. Among its four counties, Osceola now claims the fastest growing population in the state, and each of the other three counties exceeds the state population growth rate. The district population growth rate is 41 percent higher than the state average. The powerful attraction of the Orlando area as a convention center and financial center, along with Disney World and tourist-related entertainments, is evident in these numbers. Brevard County has recovered from the recession in the aerospace industry of the 70's and regained a high population growth rate primarily from elderly retirees. Seminole continues to grow in popularity as a residential community for the middle-class, many of whom commute to work in Orlando. Projections from 1980 to the year 2000 by the Bureau of Economic & Business Research show Brevard increasing in population by 90 percent, Seminole by 111 percent, and Osceola by 209 percent.

All of the health statistics in District 7 compare favorably with state averages, and the socioeconomic indicators are equally strong. Median family income at 108 percent of the state average is second only to HRS's District 9. The 1984-86 average unemployment rate for the district is 85 percent of the state figure. Although the percent of the population over 64 years is rising (particularly in Brevard and Osceola), the district rate of 13.8 percent is still well below the state average.

Hospital and nursing home beds per capita are below the state figures. This is to be expected since the district population is younger than the state average. Physicians, dentists, and nurses per capita also fall below state figures. All of Osceola County has been designated by the federal government as a dental and primary care health manpower shortage area. However, the county would not qualify as a shortage area based on the current number of dentists and physicians. Both professions have apparently responded recently to the need for health personnel caused by the rapid growth in population. The Medicaid and migrant farmworker populations in both Seminole and Orange have been, and still are, primary care health manpower shortage areas. There is a total need of 6.5 physicians to serve these populations. A portion of west central Orange County is still a dental health manpower shortage area.

District 8

District 8 in southwest Florida includes the predominately urbanized coastal counties of Sarasota, Charlotte, Lee and Collier, and the interior, mostly rural counties of Desoto, Glades, and Hendry. The population is very largely concentrated along the coast, while the interior is primarily devoted to ranching and agriculture. District 8 currently has the highest population growth rate in Florida, with an annual rate 47 percent above the state average. Charlotte, Collier, and Lee are each growing at over 5 percent per year. The Bureau of Economic & Business Research at the University of Florida projects that between 1980 and 2000, Lee's population will grow by 110 percent, Collier's by 123 percent, and Charlotte's by 131 percent. Charlotte will continue as the state's "oldest" county: by the year 2000, 40 percent of the Charlotte population will be 65 or older, as compared to 36.5 percent today.

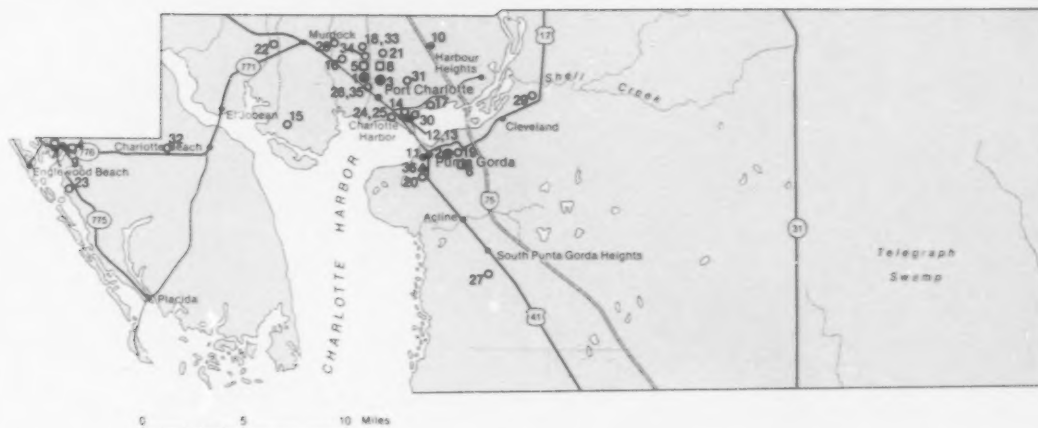

Overall, the health statistics in District 8 compare very favorably with state figures. However, Glades, Hendry, and Desoto counties have age-adjusted death rates and infant mortality rates well above state averages. Charlotte County, however, has the distinction of having the lowest age-adjusted death rate of any county in Florida, probably due to the generally good health of the migrating elderly. Births to teenage mothers are a notable problem in Glades. This may be a partial factor in Glades' infant mortality rate, currently 63 percent above the state average. Average income for District 8 is comparable with the state average, but Desoto and Glades have average incomes much below the state average. With the exception of Hendry, unemployment has not recently been high in this district. In District 8, the proportion of blacks in the population is well below the state average everywhere except for Desoto, Glades, and Hendry. The percent of the district population which is 65 years or over is higher than all other districts except District 5. Health care resources in District 8 must therefore be tailored to the needs of senior citizens.

On a district-wide basis the quantity of health care resources appears sufficient. Glades and Hendry counties have in the past been designated by the federal government as primary care health manpower shortage areas. Currently Glades has three primary care physicians (all state or federal employees) and no longer technically qualifies for the designation. Hendry now has 16 primary care physicians in private practice and would fail to qualify for the shortage designation. In District 8 as in other parts of the state there are sub-populations, usually poverty groups, including migrant workers, who do not have adequate access to physician and dental care even in the midst of a manpower surplus. In Collier County, the Everglades and Immokalee service areas are designated as primary care shortage areas, and have a need for 6.7 primary care physicians. In Lee, the Medicaid/migrant population would require 8.4 primary care physicians in order to reach the desired federal standard of one per 3,500 persons. Likewise the poverty/migrant group in Desoto needs 3.9 primary care physicians. The dental health manpower shortage populations in the district include the Everglades and Immokalee residents in Collier, and the migrant/seasonal farmworkers in Lee. These populations need 3.9 and 3.1 dentists respectively to bring them up to state standards.

District 9

District 9, the "Treasure Coast," is comprised of Indian River, St. Lucie, Okeechobee, Palm Beach, and Martin counties, and is the second fastest growing district in the state. Like District 8, the coastal zone contains the vast bulk of the population, while the interior, reaching to Lake Okeechobee, remains sparsely settled and agricultural. The annual population growth rate of every county exceeds the state average rate. District health statistics are generally good, with a few exceptions. Okeechobee has an unusually high age-adjusted death rate, 28 percent above the state average. In fact, age-adjusted death rates in Okeechobee are uniformly high for every major cause of death except diabetes. The high accident death rate may be due in part to the reliance upon ranching and agricultural employment, occupations which are more hazardous than most. St. Lucie has an infant death rate some 40 percent above the state average. This appears to be due to the generally poor social, economic, and health conditions of the black poverty population in the Ft. Pierce area. The poverty and migrant populations of St. Lucie County have been designated by the federal government as primary care health manpower shortage areas. Numbering about 33,000 people, 27 percent of whom are below the poverty line, this population is in need of 6.2 primary care physicians according to federal standards. The same group is estimated to need 7.2 additional dentists in order to reach federal standards for proper dental care. Poverty populations in Palm Beach County (in the Everglades area and parts of West Palm Beach) need 15.2 physicians and 12.2 dentists based upon federal standards. Low income persons in Indian River are in need of five dentists.

The socioeconomic statistics for District 9 are, overall, favorable; however, the unemployment rate is an exception. The district unemployment rate for 1984-86 was 20 percent above the state average, and every county exceeded that average. Both Okeechobee and St. Lucie counties have had a three-year average unemployment rate in double digits. A contributing factor in the poor health statistics of those two counties might be the high unemployment and its attendant economic problems.

The racial composition of District 9 is about the same as the state; however, Martin County has very few black residents compared to the state average while St. Lucie has a greater than average black population. The age distribution tends to be more elderly than average in this district with the exception of Okeechobee County.

Health care resources appear to be adequate in District 9, although not evenly distributed. There is a surplus of dentists in Palm Beach County and Martin County has an excess of physicians. Hospital beds, nursing home beds, and nurses are approximately evenly distributed. However, using the state average ratio of physicians per 10,000 people as a guide, St. Lucie needs 90 physicians, and Okeechobee needs 10 more. The state data for dentists indicate a need of 22 dentists in St. Lucie and 5 dentists in Okeechobee. There is also a deficit of registered nurses in Okeechobee County where the ratio is only about one half the state figure.

District 10

District 10, comprising only Broward County, has apparently passed through its period of maximum population growth, and is now growing at a relatively modest 2.6 percent per year. Adjusting for land area which can not be developed (the Everglades, the water management areas, and wetlands), Broward County now has almost 4,000 people per square mile, exceeding even Pinellas County in population density. The county's ecosystem has probably reached its carrying capacity. Higher population densities, although possible, might well result in lowering the quality of life for the residents due to degradation of the county's natural resources. Higher population densities are also often accompanied by higher suicide, homicide, and crime rates: all of which lower the social desirability of an area. Presently the health statistics in Broward as well as the economic data are very favorable. Median family income is 113 percent of the state average, and unemployment rates over the past three years have averaged only 78 percent of the state rate (see Page 101).

Broward County's health care resources per 10,000 population exceed state averages in every category except nursing home beds. Dentists particularly are in apparent oversupply, with a population-based ratio 136 percent of the state figure. Nurses are at 113 percent of the state average, and physicians are at 117 percent. Regardless of this apparent abundance of practitioners, there is a portion of Broward County which has been designated as a primary care health manpower shortage area. Deerfield Beach (just north of Pompano Beach) with its poverty and migrant population comprising about 22,000 people, 20 percent of whom are below the poverty line, has been declared a shortage area. This population needs 5.2 additional primary care physicians to reach federal standards.

A challenge for Broward's future, if it is to maintain its favorable quality of life, is to recognize the limited population capacity of the narrow coastal strip which is available for development.

District 11

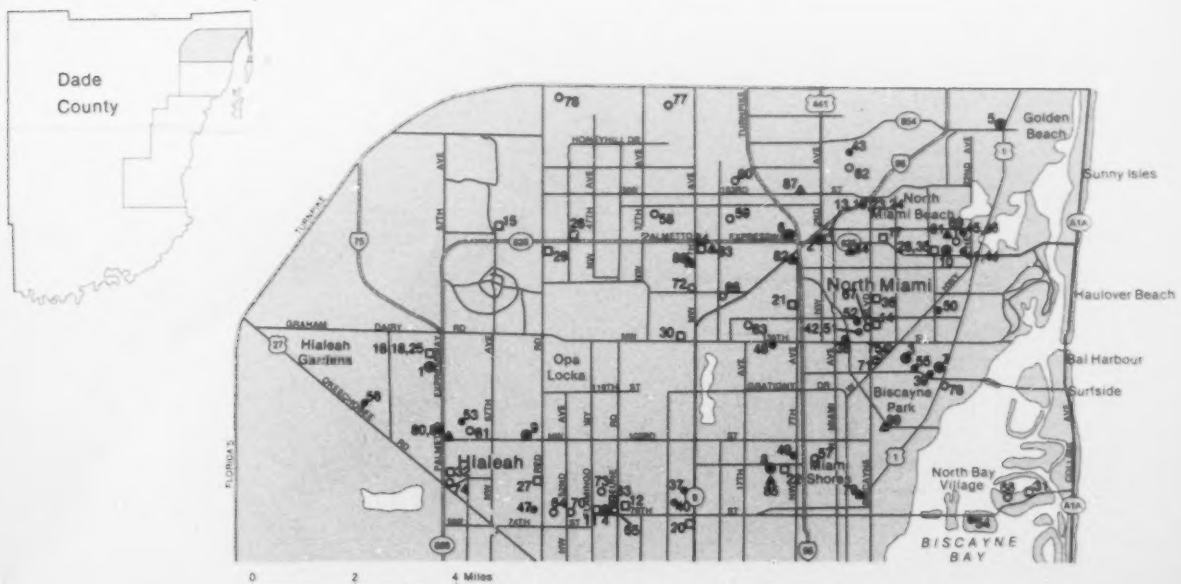

District 11, comprising Dade and Monroe counties, is the most populous HRS district, and 96 percent of that population resides in Dade. Like Broward, the population growth rate has lessened markedly here in the past few years to such an extent that the population growth rate in Dade is now less than one-half the state figure. Any description of this district must bear in mind that immigrants from South America and the Caribbean make up about one-third of the population and provide a cultural and social flavor which is distinctly different from any other part of Florida.

The health statistics in District 11 compare favorably with state averages. Among the socioeconomic statistics, the median family income is 107 percent of the state figure, but at the same time the percent of families below the poverty line (11.8%) is well above the state figure. The unemployment rate for the past three years has averaged 20 percent above the state average. The gap between rich and poor, employed and unemployed, takes on special meaning in light of the incidence of crime, delinquency, and drug use in this area. As an example of this, the 1985 death rate from homicide in Dade was over twice the state mean. Unemployment, one source of these problems, has been exacerbated by the influx of Caribbean immigrants who have intensified employment competition, especially for jobs traditionally held by Dade's black workers.

Among health care resources, physicians, dentists, and hospital beds are in ample supply. Hospital beds, on a per capita basis, are 21 percent above statewide figures, and physicians per capita are 46 percent higher than the state. The oversupply of these resources cannot be explained by a surplus of elderly in the district. As may be seen in the table this district has a smaller percent of persons over age 64 than the state as a whole.

District 11 has four primary care health manpower shortage designations, all in Dade County. Selected census tracts in the Princeton - Homestead region comprise the first designated area, including about 95,000 people, 23 percent of whom are below the poverty line. This area needs 14.6 additional primary care physicians. The second designated area is a population of medically indigent persons living in census tracts 42-45 on Miami Beach. This group numbers about 11,000, 30 percent of whom are below the poverty line, and needs about two more physicians. The third designated area, termed "Model City", includes that area of Miami lying east of Hialeah, north of 36th. Street, and south of 79th. Street. This predominately black neighborhood includes 127,000 people, 37 percent of whom are below the poverty line, and who need 24 additional primary care physicians. The final health manpower shortage designation is Jackson Memorial Hospital, which has been designated as a shortage facility because it is providing primary medical care services to an area having a primary care manpower shortage (Model City) and the hospital has insufficient capacity to meet the primary care needs of that area. There are two dental health manpower shortage designations in District 11, both in Dade County. The Model City area is in need of 9.8 additional dentists, and the migrant and seasonal farmworkers in Florida City need one more dentist.

Health Care Facilities

The following pages contain lists of health facilities arranged in alphabetical order by facility type. For those facilities included on the maps in the atlas, a two part number precedes the list entry (e.g. 94-17). The first number represents the page number on which the appropriate map appears; the second number corresponds to the numbered symbol on that map. Facilities for which no map reference is shown include those for which data was received after completion of the appropriate map, those which were opened after map preparation, services such as home health agencies which do not depend on a specific physical location for service delivery, small ACLFs for which there was no space on the maps, etc.

These lists represent the most recent data available to the Office of Regulation and Health Facilities at the time the lists were prepared. Facilities lists used to compile this appendix were received from many sources and in some cases, complete addresses were not available from any source. In other instances, facilities may have opened, closed or changed names since these lists were compiled. Any corrections should be reported to the Data Analysis Unit, Office of Regulation and Health Facilities, 2727 Mahan Drive, Tallahassee, Florida 32308.
